Story of Rift With Lewis Is Dismissed By Roosevelt

Comment Unnecessary, He Says; Sit-Down Issue Also Avoided.

Timbermen Voting On Quitting A. F. L.

C. I. O. Launches Attack on 'Fair Weather Friends.'

By William V. Nessly.

As President Roosevelt yesterday dismissed without comment a published report he and John L. Lewis, militant head of the Committee for Industrial Organization, were near a break in their relations, the C. I. O. issued a sharp denunciation of its "fair-weather friends" who have turned against it on the ground it "has gone too far."

The President, at his press conference, was asked about the report of a break and quickly replied he thought no comment was needed. Asked whether he shared the view of Secretary of Labor Perkins, expressed last Saturday, that "sit-down" strikes are "unsuited" to modern life in this country, he said he had read only the headlines on her letter, not the views themselves.

He gave the same reply when questioned as to his reaction to the speech on Monday of Secretary of Commerce Roper warning both industry and labor that the public will not tolerate continued unnecessary strife.

Silence Criticized.

The most recent comment by Mr. Roosevelt on the disturbed labor situation came last week when, referring to the steel strike, he said he felt the majority of the American people took the attitude, "A plague on both your houses." Previously there had been some criticism of what was termed the Administration's silence as strife increased.

Meanwhile, Lewis was conferring here with officials of the Federation of Woodworkers, timbermen's union with some 100,000 members, who are voting on quitting the American Federation of Labor, headed by William Green, for the C. I. O. The woodworkers organization is a part of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, whose president, William Hutchinson, is one of Lewis' most bitter enemies in the ranks of the A. F. of L.

Harold Pritchett, president of the woodworkers, and O. M. Orton, member of the executive board, conferred with Lewis and reported that early rturns in the federation referendum wre running about 90 per cent for C. I. O. affiliation. A campaign, with the aid of some 50 organizers and backed by the C. I. O., to enroll most of the million timber workers in the United States and Canada was planned.

Agreement Planned.

Pritchett also said Labor's Nonpartisan League, of which Lewis is one of the leaders, and the Commonwealth Federation of the Northwest, a political organization, were planning a working agreement to co-ordinate their opposition to incorporation of labor unions and map a program for the 1938 Congressional elections.

Today Lewis will confer with representatives of 20 organized groups in the maritime industry to formulate plans for complete organization, under C. I. O. auspices, of maritime workers throughout the country.

It became known yesterday the Senate Commerce Committee, headed by Senator Royal S. Copeland (Democrat), of New York, has been studying a number of affidavits concerned with general charges of communism among some maritime workers.

"I don't know what the committee can do about them," Senator Copeland said. "I think the matters set forth should be left up to the Department of Justice, but that department doesn't seem greatly interested."

Ship Program Menaced.

Copeland, whose committee handled the merchant marine act to build up the American merchant marine, continued:

"There isn't any use of our building ships unless we can have seamen to operate them and are willing to abide by the law of the sea. If the decks of the ships are to be the scene of sit-down strikes or mutiny in the guise of strikes, we should not build the ships."

He declared he was not opposed to labor unions, but against any

Boy Scouts who were in the vicinity of Washington Airport last night when the plane bearing Pitcher Dean came to a landing, made a beeline for the National League's All-Star pitcher who gladly autographed their books and other mementos before he sped to a radio station to announce his arrival in the Capital city.

30,000 to See 'Dizzy' Battle Gomez in All-Star Tilt Today

Cardinal Pitcher Changes Mind, Arrives by Plane; Van Mungo, Stratton Out; Odds Quoted at 6 to 5; Game Starts at 1:30.

By Shirley Povich.

Baseball's dream game—at once real and fanciful—with a super star glittering in every setting on the diamond, moves in on Washington today with the blessings of the White House and Dizzy Dean.

The President of the United States had never wavered in his intention to be there at Griffith Stadium this afternoon when the hand-picked stars of the American and National leagues meet in battle, but Dizzy Dean couldn't be bothered with the game until last night.

Suddenly reversing an equally sudden decision that he would not play with the National League All Stars because "I am tired of having people tell me what to do," Dean rushed aboard a plane in St. Louis yesterday and jauntily stepped off here last night.

The Cardinals' unpredictable pitching ace will take the mound against the Yankees' Lefty Gomez a few moments after President Roosevelt, who boasts the highest salaried pitching arm of them all, hurls a spanking new baseball toward the diamond and signals the start of the game. That will be at 1:30 p. m.

Washington was in something of a dither as game time neared. From every point in the two big leagues incoming trains deposited the headliners of the game—Carl Hubbell, Ducky Medwick, Lou Gehrig, Hank Greenberg, Jimmy Foxx, Arky Vaughan, Joe Cronin, Van Mungo and numerous lesser lights.

Big league officialdom is here, too—Judge Landis, lord high commissioner of the game; President Will Harridge, of the American League; President Ford Frick, of the National. Throughout yesterday they were holding council sessions with Managers Joe McCarthy, of the American Leaguers; Charley Dressen, of Cincinnati, who was representing Manager Bill Terry, of the National League, and the umpires.

Tardy Washington fans, who failed properly to appreciate the magnitude of the spectacle when tickets went on sale, are now at the mercy of the scalpers. Downtown, the few pasteboards that the scalpers were able to lay their hands upon, were retailing for as high as $20 for the $1.65 box seats; $10 for the $1.10 grandstand tickets.

The 30,392 seats in the park, incluring 9,700 in the concrete centerfield bleachers, have long since been sold and Griffith Stadium officials are limiting standing room to the

3,000 Return To Cleveland's Mills; Jeered

Picket Killed in Michigan Clash; 200 Indicted at Youngstown.

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, July 6—Steel mills in another major salient in the seven-State strike opened here today. An estimated 3,000 workers returned to their posts at three Republic Steel Corporation plants after 41 days of idleness.

Jeers and shouts of "scab" marked the maneuver—the latest in a series of back-to-work marches—but there was no violence. National Guard bayontes and machine guns kept peace.

The Cleveland mills, shut since the strike broke out May 26, had been regarded as one of the C. I. O.'s stoutest strongholds.

At Menominee, Mich., a clash between pickets massed around the gate of the strike-bound Lloyd Manufacturing Co. and nonstriking employes who attempted to return to work by driving through the lines, resulted in the death of a picket.

Joseph Jozwiak, 42 was injured fatally, Police Chief Frank Parsek said, when he fell beneath an automobile driven by Harold Eisman, 25, of Marinette, Wis.

Senate Group To Report D. C. Tax Bill Today

Introduction to Chamber This Week Is Held Doubtful.

By James D. Secrest.

The Senate District Committee will report the omnibus tax bill today, Chairman King stated last night, but it is doubtful whether it will be called up in the Senate before next week.

A report was being drafted by the committee yesterday and will be submitted to members today along with printed copies of the bill for approval before being filed in the Senate.

The text of the Senate-revised measure disclosed that the committee differentiated between food sold for home consumption and that sold in restaurants in drawing up the 2 per cent sales tax.

While food products sold for human or animal consumption are exempt from the levy, the tax is applicable to food sold and consumed on the premises of the seller.

Gasoline is specifically exempt from the 2 per cent levy.

End to French Border Guard Is Threatened

Paris to Permit Arms for Loyalists Unless Naval Patrol Resumes.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, July 6.—France tonight demanded re-establishment of the non-intervention patrol around wartorn Spain on the threat of ceasing to guard her own southern frontier and thus allow arms and men to reach the Spanish government.

French officials declared both the naval patrol, disrupted when Italy and Germany withdrew in anger over alleged Spanish attacks on their patrol vessels, and neutral guard of the Portuguese border must be renewed.

Charles Corbin, the French Ambassador to London, was instructed to present the French stand at the Friday meeting of the 27-nation nonintervention committee, officials said.

Conditions which France placed as a price for continued surveillance of the Pyrenees bordering Spain were outlined thus:

"First, naval control must be re-established under some form or other, but offering sufficient guarantees to be approved by the French cabinet.

"Second, control of the Portuguese frontier must function as formerly or following a new formula of equal efficacy."

(An end of the Portugese frontier patrol, which had been under the supervision of British officers, was announced by Portugal last week after disruption of the naval control scheme.)

British Seek Compromise.

London, July 6 (AP).—The British government moved toward a compromise tonight to break the deadlock over nonintervention in Spain.

With a session of the full, 27-nation nonintervention committee called for Friday, Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden told the House of Commons:

"We've not only made our own proposals; we've declared our readiness to consider any other proposals that are just and fair."

Eden and Charles Corbin, French ambassador, discussed the nonintervention problem in a conference.

(Informed sources in Paris said France had agreed to a proposal by which France and Great Britain would grant the Spanish insurgents belligerent rights in Spanish territorial waters in return for Italo-German co-operation with the nonintervention patrol. They said France was trying to win Britain to the plan.)

Santander Invaded.

Hendaye, Franco-Spanish Frontier, July 6 (AP).—Insurgent dispatches from the northern front tonight declared Generalissimo Francisco Franco's army had pushed its north coast conquest into Santander province with the capture of two strategic pinnacles.

Rebel Troops Mass.

Valencia, July 6 (AP).—Government observers reported tonight large forces of insurgents, including Moors, were massing on the Teruel front. New troops, they said, were being distributed along the whole length of the insurgent salient inland and north of Valencia.

Alleged Bombers Seized.

Lisbon, Portugal, July 6 (AP).—Police announced tonight they had detained several persons suspected of being connected with the attempt to bomb Premier Antonio de Oliveira Salazar Sunday.

Forced Vote On Court Bill Is Promised

Introduces One-Justice Compromise; Defies Filibuster.

By Robert C. Albright.

With a blare of oratory and tumultuous debate, the compromise court bill was maneuvered into fighting position in the Senate yesterday in the Administration's first hot siege for passage.

Tense omens of filibuster brought a defiant introduction from Senate Majority Leader Joseph T. Robinson as the original six-judge increase was immediately subordinated, and a one-judge-a-year substitute advanced to supplant it.

"It is my intention," Robinson announced, "to keep this bill before the Senate until it is disposed of, making reasonable allowance for emergency measures."

It was the beginning of what may become the longest "legislative day" in the history of the Senate—the legislative day of July 6. Anticipating a filibuster, Robinson is prepared to keep the Senate continuously on this day's business until the bill is passed, defeated or sidetracked.

Steering Group Replies.

But if opposition leaders were preparing to filibuster, they studiously refrained from an open threat. It was Robinson only who used the word, and he used it repeatedly.

"It has been heralded throughout the Nation that those who are opposed to the court reorganization bill in any form have the intention of obstructing business," he said.

The opposition's reply followed a meeting of their steering committee in the late afternoon.

"We will talk long enough to be sure the Congress and the country fully understand the situation," said Senator Edward R. Burke, of Nebraska, a member.

On the floor, opponents contented themselves with caustic comments on arguments advanced for the substitute plan by Robinson and Senator Carl A. Hatch, of New Mexico. Hatch, together with Robinson and Senator M. M. Logan, of Kentucky, had worked out the outlines of teh ccompromise bill.

Before the first tempest of Senate forensics, Senator Burton K. Wheeler, of Montana, liberal leader of the opposition, reached the final parting of the ways with the President on the court plan.

Wheeler Unyielding.

In an hour and a half White House conference, Wheeler plainly expressed his unyielding opposition, parted friends, and then returned to the Capitol for a fight to the end.

Although Wheeler declined to discuss the interview, colleagues said his words to the President in substance were as follows:

"If I were your worst enemy, I would support your bill. But I am your friend. This bill will kill your popularity. It is the difference between your coming out as a great President or a bad one. I don't want to see that happen to you."

The President at his press conference volunteered only what he said he and Wheeler had agreed to tell the press—that they had a very interesting conversation on the subject of improving the administration of justice.

Wheeler was called to the White House on intercession of Senator Homer T. Bone, of Washington, who was present. There had been reports that he would not visit the President, due to personal hostility, and the interview served answer them.

The Montanan reputedly suggested the President withdraw his plan, pointing out he already had won his victory in the Wagner act

Flier Leaps Out At 14,000 Feet And Lands Safely

Langley Field, Va., July 6 (AP).—One of the Army's giant "flying fortresses" sideslipped during a training flight today and one member of its crew of eight bailed out, dropped 14,000 feet and landed safely in a remote section of the southwest Virginia mountains.

The flier, Private J. H. Shealey, unhurt except for slight scratches on his hand which he said he received in making the jump, made his way out of the mountains and reported to Langley Field tonight he had arrived in Winston-Salem, N. C., by bus.

The bombing plane, attached to the Ninety-sixth Squadron, was on an instructional flight. Shealey was in the armament control compartment under the nose of the ship when it sideslipped. He bailed out through an emergency door.

The pilot regained control, radioed headquarters of the accident, and returned to Langley Field.

Malden, England, July 6 (AP).—Just as his friends were starting dinner last night Test Pilot J. K. Quill literally dropped in on the party. While trying out a new British bomber he went into a spin at 10,000 feet and had to take to his parachute. Quill made a safe landing in his friend's garden while the plane crashed on the roof of an unoccupied house nearby.

Red Oak, Iowa, July 6 (AP).—Charles P. Armstrong, 56, Pike County, Ill., parachute jumper, fell 300 feet to his death before a holiday crowd of 15,000 when a hot air balloon to which he was tied collapsed and his parachute failed to open.

France Inches to the Right; Resignation of Premier Blum Solved No Problem.

By Felix Morley.

No. 16 in a Series.

Copyright, 1937, The Washington Post.

Paris, June 25.

Absorbed by their own affairs, Americans as a whole have paid little attention to the French "New Deal." Yet the course of development followed in this sister democracy during the past year or so is of very real importance to the United States.

It is of general interest as the energetic effort of an intelligent people to solve the tremendous problems of the day through democratic processes.

It is of particular interest to Americans because the line followed by the Blum government has in so many respects resembled that of the Roosevelt Administration.

And it is of importance as well as interest to us because of its striking revelation of what happens when benevolent intentions operate through the medium of protracted deficit financing.

The resignation of Premier Blum, because of the refusal of the senate to grant him dictatorial powers in the financial crisis, has of itself solved none of the problems confronting France. On the contrary, it has merely made further temporizing with these problems impossible.

CAMILLE CHAUTEMPS.

Leon Blum, like Wilkins Micawber, proceeded on the assumption that something would turn up to avert the disagreeable consequences of a constant excess of expenditures over receipts.

These hopes have now gone the way of all rainbows. And it is the unenviable task of Premier Chautemps and Finance Minister Bonnet to assume control under skies which disillusion makes the more dark and lowering.

Irish Leader Loses Control Of Parliament

By the Associated Press.

Dublin, Irish Free State, July 6.—President Eamon De Valera's Fianna Fail party failed to gain even a majority in the Free State's Dail Eireann election, complete returns showed tonight.

The announcement was a sharp blow to the New York-born president. It is predicted he may call another election within a few months in an effort to get a clear mandate.

De Valera's party won 69 places in the Dail Eireann (lower house of Parliament), the same number taken by all the other parties together. But one of the president's adherents will be speaker of the Dail, who votes only in case of a tie.

Former President William T. Cosgrave's party, the U. C. fine Gael, took 48 places. Laborites won 13 and independents 8.

In the old house, De Valera had a majority of 4 over all the other parties and a majority of 24 over Cosgrave's party.

Labor gained five seats over the number it held in the previous house.

If he decides against calling a new election, De Valera will have to seek co-operation from the Laborites. In the past they often have worked with him, but they flatly opposed his pet creation—the proposed new constitution for Ireland.

The latest tabulation of ballots on the constitution showed 599,635 in favor of it and 452,692 opposed.

The charter would sever the last link between the Free State and Great Britain, even ignoring the British king, and would change the country's name to "Eire" (pronounced "Airy"). It was designed to permit the eventual adherence of northern Ireland.

Roosevelt Asks New Saving to Balance Budget

10% Departmental Thrift Estimated to Realize $400,000,000.

By Franklyn Waltman.

President Roosevelt yesterday again took steps to bring about a balanced budget for the current fiscal year.

At his semiweekly press conference, the President revealed he had called on the heads of all departments and independent agencies of the Federal Government to save at least 10 per cent of their appropriations for the year, exclusive of fixed charges, such as interest on the debt, salaries and contracts.

Mr. Roosevelt estimated such savings would total approximately $400,000,000. He pointed out he had no authority to make any reduction in salaries and that it was not possible to reduce appropriations for such items as interest on the public debt and Army and Navy rations. In order to achieve the savings, he said, some activities of the Federal Government must be curtailed, but he declined to specify them.

Mr. Roosevelt explained he already had discussed with the Cabinet plans for effectuating the savings. Within a week or so, he said, he would confer with the heads of independent agencies to discuss with them similar plans.

The letter which the President sent to department and agency chiefs was as follows:

"In preparing the apportionment of funds available for the fiscal year 1938, as called for by Treasury Department Circular No. 494, Revision No. 4, of June 11, 1937, it is my desire that there be set up such reserves as will amount in the aggregate to not less than 10 per cent of the total amount of all funds that are properly susceptible to the establishment of reserves for that fiscal year. It will not be possible,

U. S., British Planes Complete Test Flights Across Atlantic

By the Associated Press.

The North Atlantic was spanned by two commercial flying boats yesterday, heralds of continent-to-continent air service for passengers, mail and express.

The 19-ton British Imperial Airways airplane Caledonia streaked across the ocean east to west in 15 hours 28 minutes.

A tail wind helping it, the Pan-American Clipper III, United States flying boat of 22¾ tons, crossed in the opposite direction in 12 hours 29 minutes.

The starting points and termini of the long over-water hops were Botwood, Newfoundland, and Foynes, Irish Free State, separated by almost 2,000 miles of often turbulent water and freakish weather born in the Arctic.

"It was a great trip," commanded Capt. A. S. Wilcockson, of the Caledonia. Capt. Harold E. Gray, of the Clipper, said, "It was a pleasant, enjoyable trip."

To the thousands who massed at Botwood and Foynes to watch two groups of fliers usher in a new era in transportation, the occasion had portents which warranted cheers.

They showed their enthusiasm as the two silver-hulled, four-engined winged boats settled on the water at either side of the Atlantic.

The flights, for survey purposes, began at Southampton, England, and Port Washington, N. Y., and there they will end. The Caledonia is due at the little Long Island community Friday and the Clipper at Southampton Thursday.

In all, the Clipper will fly 3,400 miles to link Great Britain with the United States. The Caledonia will fly 3,560, veering northwest to Montreal before proceeding down to Port Washington.

Colorado Will Release Planes Over Phoenix Group Today.

Navy Co-ordinates Wide Plane Hunt

Miss Earhart on Land, Calls Indicate; Japan Sends 2 Ships.

By the Associated Press.

Honolulu, July 6.—The battleship Colorado changed its course and and sped toward Winslow Bank, 100 miles east of Honolulu Island, today in the hunt for Amelia Earhart as the Navy moved to co-operdinate the far-flung searching efforts.

The shift coincided with an apparently growing belief that if Miss Earhart and her navigator, Frederick J. Noonan, were alive they had reached an island or a coral reef.

Small islands are numerous beginning some 200 miles to the south, east and northwest of Howland, but virtually are unknown in the previously searched area to the north.

The Colorado, which had been heading from Honolulu toward the area north of Howland where the Coast Guard cutter Itasca, the Navy minesweeper Swan and the British freighter Moorby had been searching, planned to release its three catapult planes over the Winslow Bank area late tomorrow.

Special lookouts were stationed on the battleship late today to watch for any floating objects, and officers said they would light searchlight beacons beginning tonight. The Colorado plans to contact the Itasca tomorrow morning.

Navy Supervising Itasca.

Coast Guard authorities said the Itasca had been placed under temporary supervision of the Navy to permit better search co-ordination.

Winslow Bank lies on the northern fringe of the Phoenix Islands, which center at about 280 miles southeast of Howland. It is a reef.

Shortly before the search plans were changed, George Palmer Putnam, husband of Miss Earhart, reported the directional bearings taken on the most likely of the mysterious radio signals from that region, pointed to the Phoenix Islands.

Putnam stated if any of the numerous radio reports believed to be from the lost world-girdling plane were genuine, the ship must have been down on a reef or an island.

He said he had determined definitely the plane would not have been able to send signals if down in the water.

Putnam expressed appreciation of the Naval and Coast Guard efforts, which included sending of the big aircraft carrier Lexington and three destroyers from San Diego.

President Roosevelt expressed concern for Miss Earhart's safety. He said the searchers had been ordered to cover as much territory as possible.

First reports of the revised plans did not state what would be done with the Itasca, which had been awaiting the Colorado's arrival north of Howland to replenish its fuel and water supplies.

The Moorby, which had been assisting the Itasca and the Swan, decided to proceed to its next port of call.

Belief Miss Earhart and Noonan might have fallen short of Howland instead of overshooting it followed navigators' reports indicating they may have been bucking brisk headwinds.

Phoenix Search Ordered.

"The weather analysis of the flight period," Putnam told Coast Guard officials, "showed lively headwinds aloft, much stronger than Noonan reckoned with.

"They probably never got within 100 miles of Howland as thought."

One of the messages from Miss Earhart's plane shortly before it was last heard from officially at 3:14 p. m. (E. S. T.) Friday said the plane was 100 miles from its goal.

After a conference with Putnam, Lieut. Frank Johnson, of the Coast Guard, recommended a naval search of the Phoenix Island area.

A few hours earlier hopes soared on the strength of a report from the Coast Guard cutter Itasca that it had sighted lights which might be flares. However, the cutter soon concluded they were from a meteor.

Nevertheless, the Itasca continued to search the area 280 miles north of Howland.

The Colorado reported at 11 a. m. (Eastern standard time) today she was about 300 miles east and 450 miles north of Howland.

From the South Pacific the Japanese airplane carrier Kamoie

2,600 Aged, Destitute Face Privation in D. C. Because of Appropriation Delay, Officials Say

Because of delayed Congressional action on the 1938 District appropriation bill, approximately 2,600 aged and destitute persons in Washington are facing privation, it was reported last night.

Old-age benefit checks, scheduled to have been paid July 1, have been held up nearly a week by Government "red tape," it was charged.

And it will be at least another week before funds are available for payment of old-age claims, according to District Auditor Daniel J. Donovan.

Meanwhile, aged and needy persons, unable to work and dependent upon their relief checks for daily living expenses, are seeking aid from the Community Chest and Board of Public Welfare. Many, it was reported, have not eaten for several days.

The appropriation bill, Donovan explained, was not passed until June 29, last day of the old fiscal year. Before funds may be secured, he said, appropriation warrants must be issued and signed by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller General.

Until this is done, said Donovan, there will be no 1938 funds to the credit of the District disbursing officer.

Elwood Street, director of the Board of Public Welfare, said he was powerless to aid the situation. Hundreds of aged persons, he said, have stormed his office since July 1 seeking explanations.

Community Chest officials reported that many of those who applied for aid from the various chest agencies are faced with starvation unless prompt remedial action is taken.

"These old people can't go another week without food or necessary expense money," said one chest official. "We are doing all we can to help them—but the problem is acute."

Donovan said no advances can be made by the disbursing office until routine procedures have been completed.

New Farm Bill To Be Offered By Rep. Jones

Chance of Passage Gains as Roosevelt Urges Wallace Granary.

By Russell Smith.

Representative Marvin Jones, of Texas, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, yesterday announced he will introduce soon a bill embodying his own idea of what general farm legislation should be.

His announcement represented the longest forward stride the Administration has yet made in its progress toward such legislation at this session. Previously Jones has not looked with favor on the campaign for enactment.

The statement coincided with conferences of Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace with President Roosevelt, President Edward A. O'Neal of the American Farm Bureau Federation, and Charles Michelson, director of publicity for the Democratic National Committee.

At his press conference late in the day, the President reiterated his intention of sending to Congressional leaders a letter emphasizing the necessity for a law at this session to put the "ever-normal granary" plan into operation.

Wallace, who presumably reflects the President's views, believes immediate action is desirable because of the outlook for bumper crops of many commodities and the fear that resultant price declines will cause hardship to farmers.

Obvious stiffening of the joint Administration-farm organization determination to obtain passage was attributed by O'Neal to strengthened demands from rank and file farmers he said he found in "a 10-day swing through the sticks."

Importance attached by many to Jones' announcement springs from the chairman's previous lukewarmness toward the American Farm Bureau Federation bill offered in the House by Representative John W. Flannagan (Democrat), of Virginia, and from Jones' unwillingness to commit himself to the Administration plan for action at this session. As chairman of the Agriculture Committee, he is in position to impede or advance the bill.

He has held steadfastly to the view the present soil program is functioning satisfactorily and that nothing should be done to disturb its tenor. This view was deflected in his announcement yesterday of the bases upon which he is drafting his bill. These were:

Simplification of the present program.

Larger local control over existing and new legislation.

Selection of local farmer committees by farmers themselves.

Establishment of the ever-normal granary for storage of surpluses in fat years for release in poor crop years.

Limitation of the benefits of the programs to farmers who comply with the farm program as a whole.

Provisions for marketing control in times of oversupply.

These ideas are satisfactory to the AAA, the administrator of that agency, H. R. Tolley, told The Post last night. He said Jones had conferred "generally" with departmental experts on such legislation but that Jones is not drafting his bill in consultation with them.

Both O'Neal and Wallace talked with Jones by telephone during the day.

"The farmers want this production control," O'Neal said. The Congressmen have heard and are going to hear from the grass roots. You saw what the wheat boys did. Well, I have been talking to a lot of cotton farmer recently and they feel the same way."

His reference to the "wheat boys" was to refusal of representatives from 31 wheat growing States to indorse efforts to control 1938 acreage through payments for soil conservation. O'Neal attributed this action to a desire for thorough going control of crops.

The AAA sought the indorsement because time for planting winter wheat is approaching. It believes a dangerous surplus will ensue unless some arrangement is made for a production curb in the near future.

Mrs. J. A. Browne Dies at D. C. Home

Mrs. Joseph A. Browne, wife of Maj. Phillips Browne, U. S. A., retired, died late yesterday at her residence, 4427 Ord street northeast, after a brief illness. She was 66 years old.

A native of Washington, Mrs. Browne is survived by her husband and two daughters, Mrs. Ethel Browne Tenney, of San Francisco, Calif., and Miss Phyllis Browne. Funeral services will be held at a date to be announced later, and burial will be Arlington Cemetery.

Minister-Congressman Comes From Cincinnati's People's Church; Holds Interest in Municipal Affairs and Favors Franchise for D. C.

By Scott Hart.

Herbert Seely Bigelow (Democrat), of Ohio's Second District, is a serious-faced man with a gift for a dry, homespun sort of humor. This was noticeable when he turned to the subject of his race for Secretary of State and recalled the tribulations of his stumping tour in one of the first automobiles that ever crossed the flatlands of Ohio.

First of all, Bigelow is a minister. This is the first thing he tells you about himself. His church is in Cincinnati, is known as the People's Church and has a history extending more than 100 years. The Representative likes to dwell on its history, to recall that it was once renowned as an abolition church. Prior to the Civil War all of its members were abolitionists, out and out and for no wavering. The Representative long has served the congregation, but with a sandwiching in of officeholding.

Early he aspired to the office of Secretary of State for Ohio. It was then that he stumped the State in a car referred to as "the old red devil." The people of Ohio only knew vaguely then of automobiles. An automobile to them was something on four wheels that rapidly might become a successor to the horse and buggy. Many of them had never heard the fearsome chugging sound of the then undeveloped motors.

In such a "chariot" Bigelow started out to charm the electorate to his political ambition. "We had to get out at every turn of the roads and help the farmers subdue their horses. No wonder I was a badly beaten candidate."

The Representative seemed to come out of his reminiscence with a start. "I wonder why we can't educate men as quickly as we educate horses?" he asked of no one in particular.

Just before coming to Washington, he had served a year of a two-year term on the Cincinnati city council. It was something of preparation for him. He points out that here he is on the District Committee. And he is not hostile to the idea of giving Washingtonians the franchise.

Biography: He was born in Elkhart, Ind., January 4, 1870; received bachelor of arts degree at Western Reserve University, 1894; served as president of the Fourth Constitutional Convention of Ohio, 1912; member of the State House of Representatives, 1913-1914, and elected to the Cincinnati City Council, 1935.

He hears people say that politics and religion don't mix and he invariably answers: "Why shouldn't they?"

Norris' Planning Bill Is 'Cockeyed,' Committee Hears

By the Associated Press.

A Senate sub-committee considering the Norris regional planning bill heard the measure assailed yesterday as a "cockeyed" proposal to spend uncounted billions of dollars in a "Utopian venture."

Representative May (Democrat), Kentucky, said creation of a national system of conservation agencies modeled on the Tennessee Valley Authority would be "at cross-purposes" with other policies of President Roosevelt.

May, an outspoken critic of the TVA, said that agency's expenditures gave an "idea of what it is now proposed to undertake, despite an empty treasury."

He contended that development of power on a national scale would "hydro-electrocute" the coal industry. This brought a demand from Chairman Pope (Democrat), Idaho, of the Senate Agriculture Sub-Committee, that he supply figures to show the effect of the TVA on coal consumption.

Miss Theresia Nau Dies at Her Home

Miss Theresia Nau, 71, of 15 S street northwest, died yesterday at her home after a three-months illness.

A native of Germany, Miss Nau came to Washington more than 50 years ago. She was active in the affairs of St. Mary's Catholic Church.

Miss Nau is survived by three brothers, George, Isidore and Nathan Nau and two sisters, Mrs. George Lauten and Miss Mary Nau. Funeral services will be held at St. Mary's Church on Friday at 9:30 a. m. Burial will be in St. Mary's Cemetery.

Price-Fixing Charged to 10 Rayon Firms

Trade Commission Alleges Conspiracy to Prevent Competition.

Ten corporations manufacturing substantially all the viscose rayon yarn made in the United States were directed to cease and desist from an alleged price-fixing combination in an order issued by the Federal Trade Commission yesterday.

The Commission charged in its complaint, which named the duPont Rayon Co., with plants in Virginia, New York and Tennessee in the list, that the rayon corporations "entered into an agreement, combination, understanding and conspiracy among themselves," to eliminate price competition.

Extensive hearings revealed, the Commission said, the corporations named "entered into a price-fixing conspiracy" in the sale of viscose rayon yarn which prevented price competition in such yarn, increased its prices, and the prices of articles of wear made of such cloth.

Twenty-two members of the accounting firm of Price, Waterhouse & Co. were also named as respondents, but the Commission's order dismissed proceedings against the firm.

The corporations named were:

Tubize Chatillon Corporation, with plants at Hopewell, Va., and Rome, Ga.;

Acme Rayon Corporation, Cleveland, Ohio;

The Belamose Corporation, Rocky Hill, Conn.

On Capitol Hill

"THE STORY of the Constitution," copyright by Sol Bloom, touched off tart debate in the House yesterday.

Bloom, Democratic Representative from New York, stoutly defended the prominence his name is given in the sesquicentennial bandbook, defended it so stoutly that the House voted $275.00 to continue work of the United States Sesquicentennial Commission.

The vote was 148 to 141. So vigorous was the literary, ethical and other debate which ensued when the bill was called up that party lines were shivered.

The book bears the name of Sol Bloom as author. The copyright also is in the name of Sol Bloom. Of this, Bloom said:

"It has my name as author because it's customary to have someone's name as author. It's copyrighted in my name because the Government cannot hold a copyright."

Representative Earl C. Michener (Republican), Michigan, smashed at the appropriation in a speech that drew applause from the galleryites, who were promptly rebuked from the chair. He said:

"Shame on you! That's what's best to say, just shame on you! When the Federal Government is borrowing money to feed the hungry, you are borrowing money to send out free books."

When the bill passed the first time by a small majority, Michener objected to the meager vote on the ground that a quorum was not present and the long House roll call began.

Part of the sum the House approved yesterday would pay for free distribution of 1,250,000 copies of "The Story of the Constitution" by Sol Bloom.

A NEW HAMPSHIRE Republican member of the House, Charles W. Tobey, briefly flurried the top-heavy Democratic machine when he declined to assent to forwarding of the farm tenant bill to conference with Senate representatives. Since unanimous consent was necessary, quick, fervent parleys were held in various offices. While leaders prepared to call an emergency rules committee meeting and obtain a gag to insure action, Tobey decided to withdraw his objection. The emergency was over.

Tobey said Chairman Marvin Jones, of the House Agriculture Committee, had promised House conferees would not accede to Senate amendments to the House bill before giving the House an hour's debate. Apparently, he received assurances no attempt would be made to railroad the Senate bill to enactment.

Speaker Bankhead named Jones and Representatives Doxey (Democrat), of Mississippi, and Hope (Republican), of Kansas, as conferees on the part of the House and the legislative wheels were again in motion.

The House adopted the view of its claims committee which said it was clear Bradford had no knowledge of the Barkers' identity.

THE HOUSE JUDICIARY Committee approved unanimously the Chandler bill, designed to revise and extend the national bankruptcy laws. The legislation has been approved by President Roosevelt. It proposes the first general overhauling of bankruptcy laws since 1898, would give the Securities Commission authority to intervene in corporate reorganization proceedings in the interest of individual investors, and would require bankruptcy courts to appoint independent trustees in reorganization proceedings involving liabilities of at least $250,000.

Such trustees would take over and operate such concerns pending development and court approval of reorganization proposals.

The bill also would liberalize bankruptcy laws to assist debt-ridden wage earners. It would set up procedure under which such wage earners could pay debts out of future earnings under court supervision, without being declared bankrupts.

SENATOR HUGO L. BLACK (Democrat), of Alabama, chairman of the Senate Education and Labor Committee, announced the committee will vote today on reporting the Black-Connery wage and hour bill.

He declined to discuss probable committee action, but other Senators indicated the group has virtually agreed on a revised measure.

'Court to Weather Storm,' Is Belief Of Van Devanter

Philadelphia, July 6 (AP).—The Philadelphia Bulletin in a copyright dispatch from a staff correspondent at Simpsonville, Md., today quoted former Justice Willis Van Devanter as saying, "The Supreme Court has weathered storms before and I am sure it will weather the present one.

"And when the Court has weathered this crisis," he added, "the country will proceed in the prosperous way it did before."

"The people of the country," the former Justice was further quoted, "have been greatly benefited and blessed by the Constitution and I don't think they are going to give it up.

"And they cannot well do so without surrendering many of their liberties and advantages they have under it."

Van Devanter also was quoted as saying that "the Court in the last session did not reverse itself any more than it has at times in the past."

The former Justice said his resignation and the action of the Senate Judiciary Committee on the President's Supreme Court bill was "only coincidental."

"I had intended first to retire five years ago," he said, "but I stayed on. Increasingly I became convinced in my conclusion that I owed it to myself to quit.

"It was no surprise that I did that. The surprise lay only in the time that I did it. It was a decision that was not reached overnight. I don't think I was too old for the job."

Supreme Court Blamed for U.S. Revenue Loss

Rep. Lewis Cites 15 Billion Shortage Because of 'Unsound' Decisions.

By Sidney Olson.

The Supreme Court was blamed yesterday for an 18-year loss to the United States Treasury of more than 15 billions of dollars in revenue.

Small, white-haired Representative David Lewis (Democrat), of Maryland, took the floor of the House yesterday for a solid hour to picture in careful detail the long series of "unsound and unreasonable decisions of the court," which he said have "handicapped" the Congress in its efforts to secure revenue.

Lewis, a defender of the President's court reorganization program, argued that the Court's revenue decisions "make it impossible for me to draft a revenue bill which does not grossly and unjustly discriminate in favor of large classes able to pay."

He cited this as ample basis for a demand for an "infusion of new blood in the judiciary."

Lewis' estimate of losses of revenue through the years due to "destructive interference" by the court with legislative efforts to provide revenue—an estimate which he termed "incomplete"—included:

Repudiation by the Supreme Court in 1894 of the income tax, a loss of $1,500,000,000; tax exempt bonds or public securities, $2,000,000,000 in lost revenue; tax exemptions for city, State, county and Federal employes, $1,000,000,000; tax exemptions in the eight community property States $200,000,000; tax exemption of corporations' incomes from State-leased oil lands, $3,000,000,000; exemption of income from stock dividends, $1,060,000,000; evasion of surtaxes, $7,000,000,000.

Lewis said the Supreme Court had laid down seven "thou shalt nots" on tax legislation, despite the "plain language" of the Constitution.

These were, in brief, not obliging Federal judges to include their salaries as part of their income in computing their income taxes; not providing for an income tax on capital income; not obliging owners of public bonds to include in incomes their taxes, no matter how great their salaries; not obliging oil companies and others to pay taxes on income derived from oil lands or others leased them by a State; that States may not oblige resident citizens to include salaries as Federal employes as part of their incomes; not obliging owners of public bonds to include income in the form of interest with total net income.

Tax-exempt securities Lewis described as "a haven for the tax dodger which runs into the billions."

After recapitulating in tabular form some 17 decisions of the Supreme Court, Lewis said:

"It will be noted that this loss in revenue ($16,957,000,000) amounts to approximately one-half the national debt, which on April 27, 1937, was $34,879,987,255."

The joint Congressional committee on tax avoidance and evasion meanwhile postponed their scheduled meeting of yesterday to Thursday morning.

Former Chauffeur Of Pershing Wins $20 for Honesty

Edward C. McConnell, of 1214 East Capitol street, World War veteran and former chauffeur of Gen. John J. Pershing, was $20 richer today for his honesty.

McConnell, who has four children and who suffers from the effects of gas received in the war, recently obtained a license as a tourist guide, and was standing in front of the White House near East Executive avenue looking for customers when he noticed Mrs. George C. Metz, wife of an executive of a company in Rochester, N. Y., drop a handbag when she alighted from her car.

Retrieving the bag, McConnell asked Mrs. Metz if she had lost anything. When Mrs. Metz replied "no," McConnell displayed the bag, containing $520 in cash.

Mrs. Metz gave McConnell $20 and promised he would receive the "best belt in my husband's factory."

Parliament to Settle Pilsudski Tomb Dispute

Warsaw, July 6 (AP).—The Senate and Chamber today asked President Ignace Moscicki to call a special Parliament to deal with the conflict between government and the Archbishop of Krakow over transfer of Marshal Joseph Pilsudski's body from Krakow Cathedral to a nearby towar.

(The archbishop ordered the body removed last month, he said, because the Cathedral crypt was too damp and small to accommodate visitors. Catholic sources repudiated reports that the body was transferred because of an expected visit by King Carol of Rumania, head of the Greek Orthodox Church of his nation.)

Mad Head Hunter's 10th Victim Found In Cleveland River

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, July 6.—Detectives picked up the old, cold trail through the barren Kingsbury Run district of Cleveland tonight in search of the maddened killer whose tenth victim—beheaded and carved into a half dozen pieces—was found in the oily Cuyahoga River today.

Ten times within the last three years the defectives have started away from a torso bearing the marks of a surgically skilled slayer, and nine times they have wound up with no solution—no clews of value.

Today's victim, a towering, powerful man weighing between 180 and 190 pounds, was found by National Guardsmen, here on strike duty, a short time after a lake freighter moved up the stream.

Coroner S. R. Gerber, who has warned police on previous occasions that the killer probably was "making friends" with his next victim, said five portions of the body had been recovered from the river.

The head, as in most of the previous cases, was not found, and police despaired of identifying the tenth victim. Only two of the others—a man and a woman—ever have been identified.

2d Crash Victim Found.

Salt Lake City, Utah, July 6 (AP).—A second body was recovered today near the wreckage of a Western Air Express transport plane that carried seven persons to their deaths 25 miles southeast of here December 15. The body was identified as that of John F. Wolfe, Chicago.

35,000 Workers In Garment Trade Threaten Strike

New York, July 6 (AP).—The International Ladies Garment Workers Union tonight announced the joint board of the cloakmakers' unions had ordered a stoppage of fall clothing work Thursday in coat and suit factories throughout the city, affecting 35,000 workers in 2,000 factories.

The move, was due to the refusal of employers' to insert in recent agreements a clause that work should not be sent out to factories of allied needle industries operating under lower work standards than those prevailing in the coat and suit industry.

The tentative agreement called for an average 10 per cent wage increase and a 32½-hour week effective June, 1939.

Japan Protests New Red Raids On Manchukuo

2 Reported Slain in 'Battle' on Soviet Border; Moscow Sees Pact Broken.

By the Associated Press.

Hsinking, Manchukuo, July 6.—New tension was provoked here tonight by reports of three Soviet incursions across the frontier between Siberia and northeast Manchukuo.

Two Russian soldiers were said to have been killed and a Japanese soldier wounded in a series of border clashes that approached the scope of a battle between sizable armies.

Grave concern was expressed officially because the reported hostilities followed so soon after the strain on Russo-Japanese relations caused by the disputed sovereignty of two islands in the Amur River on the same border.

The Russians, abiding by an agreement designed to create a basis for amicable negotiations, were said to have evacuated the disputed islands, Sennufu and Bolshoi.

Soviet Army Massing.

It was reported, however, Soviet forces were massing on the Russian river bank facing the islands, and Japanese-Manchukuoan inhabitants of the region feared a new outbreak. Japanese guns last week sank a Russian gunboat there and forced two others to flee after a Russian detail allegedly fired first.

Fresh protests were sent to Moscow.

(In the Soviet capital, meanwhile, Benedict Kozlovsky, chief of the Far Eastern division of the Soviet foreign commissariat, conferred with the Japanese embassy's counselor over an alleged Manchukuo-Japanese violation of the evacuation agreement.

(The agreement, reached July 2, provided for withdrawal of forces by both nations. Answering Russian protests Manchukuoan troops were occupying Bolshoi, the Japanese counselor said he had no information to corroborate such a report. If a force had landed, he said, it was only to protect Manchukuoan inhabitants.)

Protests Tokyo "Invasion."

(Kozlovsky also protested what was termed a Japanese invasion of Soviet territory yesterday on the Manchukuoan-Siberian border near Laka Hanka. Several members of Soviet border patrols were killed in clashes there, he said.)

Japanese army officers declared Soviet troops twice attacked Japanese-Manchukuoan border guards Monday near Chienshan. They said the Russians later brought up heavy artillery and bombarded the Manchukuoan side of the border, at the same time attacking a third time with about 150 troops.

The Japanese said all three attacks were repulsed.

Chienshan is on the Trans-Siberian Railway about midway between Vladivostok, 350 miles southwest, and Khabarovsk, headquarters of the Soviety Far Eastern army, to the north.

New Trials Are Set In Scottsboro Case

Decatur, Ala., July 6 (AP).—A new series of trials in the six-year-old "Scottsboro case" was ordered today when two of eight colored defendants pleaded innocent to criminal attack charges at arraignment before Judge W. W. Callahan.

Judge Callahan set the trial of Clarence Norris for July 12 and that of Charlie Weems for July 15. After that, the judge said, the rest of the defendants will be tried each Monday and Thursday until the cases are completed.

This action ended rumors attorneys had made a "compromise" agreement whereby the defendants would plead guilty and go free after a few additional years' imprisonment. They have been in jail since the day of the alleged crime against a white woman on March 25, 1931.

Robinson Plans To Force Action For Court Bill

To Hold Compromise Plan Continuously Before Senate.

decision and the retirement of Justice Van Devanter.

There was no sign of weakening on either front in the first day's audit of Senate debate. Robinson and Hatch carried the brunt of the opening offensive. They will be followed today by Senators Logan and Joseph F. Guffey, of Pennsylvania, staunch friends of the plan. The Senate will meet at 10 a. m., two hours early, to permit an adjournment in time for the ball game.

Opponents were holding speeches in reserve. As they put it, they have "all eternity before them." But an occasional shaft was directed at the arguments of Robinson and Hatch by Burke, Wheeler, O'Mahoney and the Republican Senators, Borah, of Idaho; Steiwer, of Oregon, and Austin, of Vermont.

Frequently the exchanges became heated, as when Wheeler denied anyone "on this side wants to split up the Democratic Party," and asserted "I would be the last man on the Democratic or Republican side of this chamber to do anything to humiliate the President."

Wheeler was commenting on letters Hatch said he had received, all saying: "Now is the time to humiliate the President. Now is the time to beat Franklin D. Roosevelt."

Hatch said he never desired to "humiliate" the President, and he thought he expressed the opinion of the Judiciary Committee majority which adversely reported the court bill.

"Purely Objective."

Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney, of Wyoming, said that went for himself.

"That report was purely objective," he said. "There was not a derogatory adjective in it."

Later, Wheeler and O'Mahoney tangled sharply with Hatch when he said Justice James C. McReynolds was the real "father" of this legislation. He said McReynolds proposed substantially the same thing while President Wilson's Attorney General in 1916.

"Well, I am surprised to see the liberal Senator from Kentucky (Senator Logan), and the Senator from New Mexico (Hatch), supporting a 'McReynolds plan,' " said Wheeler.

"The Senator is no more surprised at that than some of us are when we note some of the company in which the Senator from Montana is traveling," snapped Hatch.

O'Mahoney interrupted to ask if Hatch meant Wheeler "ought to be driven from the Democratic Party."

"Some of the associates of those who oppose this plan will not have to be driven from the Democratic party, because they are already outside of it," replied Hatch.

O'Mahoney retorted that the original court bill would have been "repudiated" without help from Republican committee members.

O'Mahoney, Logan Argue.

Earlier O'Mahoney charged a campaign to "change the subject" from the issues involved, by a "studied effort" to make the country believe the Judiciary Committee report was a personal attack on the President.

Logan replied:

"I know of no member of the Senate who has said the report was intended as an attack. I did say; and I still say: Is not that the way it was interpreted throughout the country?"

Before the Senate recessed, O'Mahoney introduced the first amendment to the substitute plan. The substitute permits one addition to the court every year, for each justice on the bench over 75. One could be appointed immediately, and the second in January. The O'Mahoney amendment requires a full year's lapse between appointments.

Galleries were packed, and lines forming in the corridors, as Robinson aggressively opened the debate. Khaki clad youths from the Boy Scout Jamboree camp filled one entire gallery. Spectators sat silently, without demonstration. The frequent raps of the chairman's gavel were aimed at the hubbub on the floor itself.

The floor leader inveighed against "obstructive" tactics, and declared the opposition would permit a ballot "tomorrow" if they had the votes to beat the substitute.

Vote Is Challenged.

Burke challenged him to permit a vote on the original bill.

"No, we will not vote on the original bill," replied Robinson. "We don't have the votes to pass the original bill but we have the votes to pass this measure."

Robinson said he would know when "the Senate ceases to debate and begins to filibuster." Confronting Wheeler, he said:

"I think I could endure it longer than you, Burt—I mean the Senator from Montana."

"The Senator from Montana has announced he is training for this filibuster. Before he gets through he won't feel so cocky as he does today."

"I don't feel cocky and I'm not threatening a filibuster," said Wheeler. "But this compromise has never been heard by any committee and will take considerable time."

Robinson told the Senate he would support a Constitutional amendment compelling retirement of justices at a fixed age, in addition to the court plan substitute. But he said it was "neither necessary nor desirable to resort to the slow, difficult process of amending the Constitution if substantially the same end can be brought about by enactment of legislation."

Backs Andrews Measure.

Later he told reporters he referred to his support of the Andrews constitutional amendment, compelling retirement at 75. In a radio address last night, Senator Charles O. Andrews, of Florida, author of the amendment, said "we certainly can gain much and lose nothing by submitting this amendment and thus afford our States the privilege of making our Federal courts more representative bodies."

Said Robinson in the Senate:

"There seems to be widespread, if not general or universal sentiment in favor of the retirement of justices who have reached that age (75). It is not that all men who reach 75 lose their powers of reasoning or of judgment, but it is that by common acceptance those who have passed beyond 75 usually are in a state of mental and physical decline."

He insisted Congress has the power to accomplish this end by law.

"Day" Rule Scrutinized.

Robinson's bold front yesterday in the face of a threatened filibuster meant but one thing to observers—grinding, continuous sessions after a fortnight or so to force a vote on the substitute. Senate rules were being studiously scrutinized by both sides in preparation for the endurance test.

Much depended on President Protem. Pittman's interpretation of "legislative day"—the July 6 date the calendar will bear during the entire court debate. A seldom-used Senate rule forbids more than two speeches by a Senator on any question on the same day. The opposition insists this refers to a calendar day. If Pittman ruled otherwise it might serve as an effective weapon against a filibuster.

Poll Shows 45 for Court Bill

An informal poll of the Senate yesterday indicated 45 Senators now are for the court plan substitute, 44 apparently are against it, and 7 are doubtful.

Apparently for the substitute (45):

Progressive—La Follette, Wisconsin.

Farmer-Labor—Lundeen, Minnesota.

Independent—Norris, Nebraska.

Listed As Opposing.

Apparently against the substitute (44):

Democrats — Adams, Colorado; Bailey, North Carolina; Bankhead, Alabama; Bulow, South Dakota; Burke, Nebraska; Byrd, Virginia; Clark, Missouri; Connally, Texas; Copeland, New York; Donahey, Ohio; George, Georgia; Gerry, Rhode Island; Gillette, Iowa; Glass, Virginia; Holt, West Virginia; King, Utah; Lonergan, Connecticut; Maloney, Connecticut; McCarran, Nevada; Moore, New Jersey; O'Mahoney, Wyoming; Radcliffe, Maryland; Smith, South Carolina; Tydings, Maryland; Van Nuys, Indiana; Walsh, Massachusetts; Wheeler, Montana.

Farmer-Labor—Shipstead.

Doubtful: (7).

Backers Claim 54.

Administration forces claim 54 votes for the substitute. To muster such a vote they must pick up nine votes from those listed here as apparently against or doubtful.

Roosevelt Asks New Saving to Balance Budget

of course, to establish a reserve in such an appropriation as the one for payment of interest on the public dept, and there will be numerous appropriations where it will be impracticable to establish a reserve of as much as 10 per cent.

"In the aggregate, however, the reserves should equal that percentage of all apportioned funds susceptible to the establishment of such reserves, and I have asked the acting director of the Bureau of the Budget to see that the apportionments for the fiscal year reflect that accomplishment."

In April the President estimated a deficit for this fiscal year of $418,000,000, exclusive of debt-retirement payments. Thus if he realizes the saving which he estimated yesterday, if he obtains the revenue which he estimated in April, and if there are no expenditures not already contemplated by the budget, the President's hope for a balanced budget (exclusive of debt retirement) on June 30, 1938, should be realized.

Even Administration officials conceded, however, there are several big "ifs" involved in the achievement of that objective. They explaind that their concern that the estimates may not be fulfilled are on the expenditure side of the budget and not over the revenue forecasts.

It was the latter, as made in the January budget, which fell short this spring and threw the President's figures out of line.

But whether expenditures can be held down as contemplated by Mr. Roosevelt was regarded as uncertain. In April, for instance, the President called on department and agency heads to effectuate a saving of $295,000,000 by curtailing in the last quarter of the fiscal year all expenses not absolutely necessary. The President accordingly reduced his estimate for expenses by that amount.

When the fiscal year ended, however, it was found that expenses had exceeded the April estimate by $220,000,000. In other words, the saving achieved totaled $75,000,000 instead of the $295,000,000 on which Mr. Roosevelt had counted.

On the other hand, it is not known how much Congress will increase the appropriations requested in the January budget message. Such undertakings as farm tenancy, housing and slum clearance await final action. In addition, demands for deficiency appropriations may materialize during the coming winter.

The action revealed yesterday by Mr. Roosevelt was forecast last April in his message to Congress, when he estimated a deficit of $418,000,000 for his fiscal year.

"I propose," he asserted on that occasion, "to use every means at my command to eliminate this deficit during the coming fiscal year. I expect to accomplish this by taking definite action at the beginning of the next fiscal year (1) to withhold from apportionment for expenditure insofar as possible, with due regard to proper functioning of the executive departments and agencies, a substantial percentage of the funds available for that year, and (2) to increase the receipts of the Treasury through the liquidation of assets of certain of the emergency agencies."

Mass Will Honor Late Rep. Connery

A "month's mind" mass, honoring the late Representative William P. Connery, jr., of Lynn, Mass., will be celebrated in St. Matthew's Church on July 15, at 9 a. m. The Rev. William Stricker will be the celebrant. The Rev. Joseph McClinchy, of Lynn, who was Representative Connery's pastor, will attend.

A Congressional committee, headed by Representative John W. McCormack, of Boston, will meet in the office of Representative John S. McGroarty, of California, this morning to lay plans for Congressional attendance and participation. Other members are Representative Raymond S. McKeogh, of Illinois; Michael J. Kirwan, of Illinois, and James M. Fitzpatrick, of New York.

Colored Youth, Age 16, Is Convicted of Attack

Tallahassee, Fla., July 6 (AP).—A circuit court jury today convicted Robert Hinds, 16-year-old colored youth of attacking a white woman at Apalachicola last May.

The jury did not recommend mercy, the verdict automatically fixing the penalty at death by electrocution. Sixty-one National Guardsmen patrolled the courthouse to prevent mob violence. There was no demonstration.

Senate Committee Will Report D. C. Tax Bill Today; Introduction This Week Is Doubtful permit fee of $10 for the privilege of collecting the sales tax.

The problem of administering the tax in the sale of products worth less than 50 cents is left for regulation of the Commissioners although a stamp is suggested in one provision of the bill.

"The tax hereby imposed shall be collected by the retailer from the consumer insofar as the same can be done," the bill states.

The term "tangible personal property," which is taxable under the sales tax title, is defined as "personal property which may be seen, weighed, measured, felt, touched, or is in any other manner perceptible to the senses, and shall be taken to include also all sales of admissions to any place of amusement, including moving pictures, theaters, theatrical performances, shows, circuses, athletic events, boxing and wrestling contests, concerts, amusement parks, piers, swimming pools, bathing establishments and fairs."

Exemption of clothing is described as "wearing apparel for any part of the body." All medicines are likewise exempt.

Printed copies of the Senate bill also revealed that the committee had amended the first title of the measure, which seeks to strengthen the present tax on intangible personal property.

Whereas the House bill waived the statute of limitations in collections of personal property taxes, the Senate measure states specifically that delinquent taxes may not be collected by a proceeding in court unless litigation is begun within six years after the assessment of the tax.

Representative Bigelow (Democrat), of Ohio, who fought singlehanded for the land tax adopted by the Senate committee, yesterday issued a statement supporting the Senate amendment and assailing the criticisms of it voiced by Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen and Rufus S. Lusk, president of the Washington Taxpayers Association.

He argued that the heavy levy on lands, as against improvements, would lower the market prices of land and encourage building.

At the same time, Bigelow expressed the opinion that the land tax of $2.50 on $100 valuation should be assessed against Federal property, now tax-exempt.

"The land of the Federal Government, not the buildings but the land, should be taxed according to its value, as privately owned land," he said, "and a 4 per cent tax on the total land value of the District would meet all public needs without any other forms of taxation.

"The United States Government is the biggest tax dodger in the District. It is escaping taxes on over $300,000,000 of land value, for which the District Government has to furnish free public service.

"If taxation were as I propose, the Government would be contributing its 40 per cent which the law says it should contribute, but the contribution would be made in the present form of a tax on the Government land value."

Bigelow also indorsed the income tax, which the House rejected. That tax, he suggested, should be chosen in lieu of a sales or business privilege levy.

"You'll have to leave out Congressmen," he added "You may put salt on a bird's tail, but you can't put a tax on a Congressman, not by an act of Congress.

"There is one thing that Congressmen do know about taxation. They know that in legislative bodies, it is the art of pushing your taxes onto the other fellow, and, if you can slip taxes onto him without his knowing it, that's a fine art."

Military Rites To Be Held for Army Veteran

Funeral Services Today at Fort Myer for Gen. Wittenmyer.

Funeral services for Maj. Gen. Edmund Wittenmyer, retired, who died at Walter Reed Hospital Saturday, will be held at the Fort Myer Chapel at 10 a. m. today. Chaplain Ora J. Cohee will officiate. Burial will be in Arlington Cemetery.

From May 10, 1910, to January 25, 1911, Gen. Wittenmyer was a member of the general staff corps, and then served for three months at the Army War College here.

Born in Buford, Ohio, Gen. Wittenmyer graduated from West Point in 1887. He attended the Infantry-Cavalry School at Fort Leavenworth in 1895 and five years later served as adjutant general, Second Brigade, China Relief Expedition.

In 1909 Gen. Wittenmyer served with the civil government of Cuba. He returned in February of that year to serve at Plattsburg, N. Y. In 1917 Gen. Wittenmyer was military adviser and later military attache at Havana, Cuba, and served until August 18, 1917, when he returned to join the 153d Infantry Brigade, which he accompanied to France eight days later.

He served with that brigade in the Calais, Baccarat, Vesle and Argonne sectors. From October 15, 1918, until June 12, 1919, he commanded the Seventh Division, and then returned to the United States.

For his World War service Gen. Wittenmyer was awarded the Distinguished Service Medal. A member of the French Legion of Honor, Gen. Wittenmyer also held the Croix de Guerre with palm.

Jury Finds Grocer Was Murder Victim

The fatal shooting of Max Dichter, 52-year-old grocer, who died Saturday in Sibley Hospital, was officially ruled a murder yesterday when a coroner's jury returned a verdict of death due to a gunshot wound administered by the hand or hands of parties unknown."

The verdict came after Detective Sergt. John Dalglish and several witnesses testified Dichter was shot in the left side by a bandit during a holdup in the latter's store in the 100 block L street northwest on June 22.

Two suspects held for two days by police were released yesterday when witnesses failed to identify them as the bandits. The shot was fired when Dichter hurled a scale at a thug during the holdup.

Democratic Liberty Impossible Without Capital, Says Dunner

Brookings Group Member Holds Fascists, Reds Are Similar.

Dr. Josef Dunner, member of the Brookings Institute and author of the recent novel "If I Forget Thee" said yesterday it would be impossible to destroy capitalism without simultaneously destroying the free institutions of democracy, in a meeting of the Civitan Club at the Hotel Mayflower.

In his discussion of dictatorships and democracies he said that while the Fascist and Communists states were antagonistic, the social orders they put into practice are at the bottom similar. "Private property in Germany has ceased to be anything but a pure legal form without real content."

He said that control in economic affairs necessarily would lead to control in private affairs in a sequence beginning with production and completing itself in restriction of the press, education and the rights of workers to leave one job for another.

"Preparation for war becomes necessary as insurance against internal conflicts. The war industries have reached the point where they are the basis of economic prosperity. Preparation for war must therefore be continued in order to maintain the stability of the whole country, and there may soon come a day when the risks of war are no greater than the risks of obsolescence in the war machine."

DR. JOSEF DUNNER.

Prince of Sweden Weds Commoner, Sacrifices Throne

Stockholm, July 6 (AP).—Prince Charles of Sweden sacrificed any chance of inheriting the throne today. He married Countess Elsa Von Rosen, a commoner.

The nephew of King Gustaf V of Sweden and brother of the late Queen Astrid of the Belgians lost his title and prerogatives in the Swedish royal family.

He acquired a new title, however, becoming by royal decree Prince Charles Bernadotte. His bride, daughter of the Swedish court master of ceremonies, became Princess Elsa.

Prince Charles was the third member of the Swedish royal family in recent years to forfeit his crown rights for love.

The new princess, seven years older than her 26-year-old husband, was divorced in 1935 from M. Aglos Von Rosen. She has three children. Neither King Gustav nor King Leopold attended the nuptials at Kvillinge, Oestergotland Province.

80 Boys Leave Capital For Camp Reeder Visit

Traveling in chartered buses, the first contingent of 80 boys left the Boys Club of Washington yesterday for a two-week vacation at Camp Reeder on the Wicomico River. Charles M. Fyfe, managing director of the club, estimates 320 boys will receive vacations there this summer.

Camp Reeder is operated on a part-pay basis. Each boy pays as much as he can, the balance being made up by Community Chest and other funds. Members of the staff of the Boys Club again will be in charge of Camp Reeder this year.

98 D. C. Children Regain Health at Camp Good Will

As far as the 98 boys and girls enjoying their first week at Camp Good Will are concerned, the Chopawamsic recreational area developed by the National Park Service for the District is a huge success, Josephine Brown, camp guidance director, declared yesterday.

"It's the first time most of the children have ever vacationed outside the District," she said. "They have never before known flowers they could pick, and daisy picking was the favorite camp activity our first night here."

Another idea to which some of the children had to become accustomed, according to Miss Brown, was that of three meals a day. Two had been their former quota. "One 10-year-old boy ate 18 slices of bread the first meal," she said.

Special cabin picnics around council fires were held at the camp on the Fourth of July. The camp is under supervision of the Family Service Association and is for underprivileged children. The next vacation group will leave Washington a week from today.

Stocks Register Largest Gains Since Oct., '34

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 6.—Stocks, led by the steel and related issues, bounded upward today in the wildest advance Wall street has witnessed since October, 1934, as bullish sentiment replaced gloom in the financial district.

Traders, returning after the three-day holiday, brought with them hopes the long steel strike was nearly at an end. Prespect of bumper crops, increased rail net earnings and reports of lessened tension in the Mediterranean trouble area all contributed to the better sentiment.

Transactions totaled 1,409,960 shares against 838,735 last Friday, making it the most active trading day since May 13. To Wall street the heightened interest came as a pleasant break in one of the dullest trading seasons in two years.

Bonds, like stocks, moved forward generally. Commodities were mixed in the futures markets, but prices, except those for wheat, were inclined higher. Wheat, after reaching new seasonal peaks in some contracts, reacted under late profit-taking and finished off by as much as 1¾ cents a bushel.

Bethlehem and U. S. Steel provided the wide swings in their sector of the stock exchange, the former advancing $6 at $91.75 and the latter $5.87 at $107. Chrysler gained $6.62 at 104.37, and J. I. Case picked up $5.12 at $167, others to add $2 to $4 more a share included Santa Fe, New York Central, General Motors, Briggs, Anaconda Copper, Montgomery Ward, International Harvester, U. S. Rubber and Westinghouse.

Charles Lipscomb Burial Tomorrow

Charles E. Lipscomb, 67, New York publisher, who died Monday at his estate near Easton, Md., will be buried tomorrow near Manassas, Va., following services at 4 o'clock at the home of Capt. and Mrs. Howard Jamison.

A native of Virginia, he was graduated from William and Mary College. His wife, a niece of James G. Blaine, and a daughter, Mrs. Thomas D. White, survive.

Also surviving are a niece and nephew, Mrs. Howard Jamison, of Manassas, and William H. Lipscomb, of Washington. Mr. Lipscomb was the son of Judge and Mrs. William E. Lipscomb, long prominent in Prince William County, Va.

France Inches Toward Right, Still Puzzled

Blum's Resignation Leaves Fiancial Problems Unsolved.

The measures these men employ, and the degree of success they achieve, will have a significance extending far beyond the confines of France.

Indeed it is not too much to say that the question of peace or war in Europe may hinge on the ability of the Chautemps government to restore internal stability in France. The most brilliant foreign policy—and that conducted by Blum and Delbos, both of whom remain in the new cabinet, has been brilliant—will not avail France now if she cannot put her own house in order. It is the opinion of President Benes, of Czechoslovakia, and other shrewd principals in the drama of contemporary Europe, that a truce to domestic politics and a united front in France is essential if peace is to be secured.

ROOTS OF THE PROBLEMS RUN DEEP INTO PAST.

Therefore, the problems which confront Premier Chautemps are worth understanding, even though their roots in some cases run deep into the past. Political, social, economic and financial factors all play their part, and often these influences are inextricably intertwined.

Nonetheless, as one talks to the leaders of various groups and studies the statistical data, the various parts fall into place and the whole takes simple and comprehensible form. Two separate visits to Paris, before and after a trip through Central Europe, have also helped to clarify the picture by defining its international setting. It is with this background that this and the two succeeding articles are written.

The first, and most fundamental, of all the facts involved is the outcome of the French general election of May 3, 1936. By this balloting was determined the composition of the Chamber of Deputies until 1940. Such an election is of much greater importance than the biennial choice of the House of Representatives with us, since a French premier can hold office only as long as he commands a majority of the chamber. He may resign, as did Premier Blum the other day, if rebuffed by the Senate. But he must resign if on any important issue he fails to receive a vote of confidence from the chamber.

SWING TO THE LEFT WAS EXPECTED.

It was anticipated in advance that last year's general election would show a swing to the left. Previous French governments had failed to show any effective leadership either in the foreign or the domestic field. And the public chafed under this cumulative political inepitude.

Premier Laval's indecisive attitude on the invasion of Ethiopia had offended Italy and Great Britain in almost equal measure. The first result of the French alliance with Russia was the entry of German regiments into the demilitarized Rhineland. Before the election there were disconcerting intimations that Belgium intended to withdraw from her traditional alliance with France. All the work of successive French premiers in strengthening the League of Nations was undone when the Laval and Sarraut governments refused to apply oil sanctions against Italy, a self-convicted and declared aggressor.

Internal policy in the months prior to the general election was as indecisive and fumbling as was French diplomacy in that period. While the full effects of the depression were felt in France later than elsewhere, the upturn has been correspondingly slow in making its appearance. In spite of the hardships caused by Laval's deflationary policy the public debt increased during 1935 by over 19,000,000,000 francs. The evil taste of the Stavisky scandal lingered and the general political uncertainty was paralleled by a widespread lack of business confidence.

Into this situation, early in 1936, were precipitated two developments which have had, and promise to continue to have, the most far-reaching consequences on the course of French history.

One of these was the merger of the heretofore antagonistic Socialist and Communist federations of trade unions. This merger, as will be noted in the following article, enormously increased the industrial strength of the famous C. G. T. (Confederation Generale du Travail.) The point to be realized here is that it also greatly augmented the political strength of French labor by making the Socialist and Communist parties allies instead of antagonists.

The second development was purely political. The balance of power in the Chamber of Deputies has long been held by the so-called Radical Socialist Party, which is actually neither very radical nor strongly socialistic, but is representative of the professional and smaller business groups. In January, 1936, a conference of the Radical Socialist Party decided on withdrawal from the Laval government, thereby forcing the resignation of that premier. This negative action was followed by a positive step of far greater significance.

The Radical Socialists decided to join with the Socialists and Communists, already allied between themselves, to form the "Popular Front" which has become so dominant a factor in French politics. The slogan of the Popular Front is defense against fascism and reaction. But the intent of its leaders from the outset has been to curb the powers of monopoly and privilege in France.

Such was the general background when the French people went to the polls to elect an entirely new Chamber of Deputies in the spring of last year. The results were spectacular and definitive.

The Communists increased their parliamentary strength from 10 to 72. The Socialists, while making less striking gains, emerged as the strongest single party, with 154 deputies. The Radical Socialists, second in strength, contributed 113 seats to the Popular Front. Two other sympathetic groups each brought 27 deputies to its support, one of these being the Republican-Socialist Union headed by Paul-Boncour and the other the Independent Left, led by Gaston Bergery, the editor of La Fleche.

FASCIST STRENGTH APPARENTLY NEGLIGIBLE.

The supporters and sympathizers of the Popular Front therefore number, all told, 393 out of the 618 members of the chamber. Those figures indicate the measure of collapse among the Rightest parties. Excluding 81 deputies who occupy a center position, the Conservatives can count upon only 144 deputies, divided among no less than eight splinter groups. The only one of these with any effective parliamentary power is the Republican Federation, headed by Louis Marin, which still holds 54 seats. Fascist representation is negligible, de la Rocque and Doriot between them controlling 10 deputies.

On the basis of these returns the premiership of Leon Blum, as leader of the Socialist Party, was foreordained. He assumed charge of the government of France on June 4, 1936 and held that high office until June 21 of this year, a tenure well beyond the average length of post-war French governments.

BLUM REPLACEMENT NO POLITICAL OVERTURN.

Nor was M. Blum overthrown by a hostile chamber. As already noted, he resigned because of obstruction to his financial program in the Senate, a conservative, indirectly elected, body in which the Socialists have only 14 and the Communists just 2, of the 313 members. Demand for making the second chamber more responsive to the popular will has been augmented, as perhaps M. Blum intended should be the case, by its successful resistance to his financial policies.

From one viewpoint the replacement of M. Blum by M. Chautemps, a Radical Socialist leader who was a minister without portfolio in the former's cabinet, is relatively unimportant.

There has been no real political overturn. Aside from the change in leadership only half-a-dozen out of the 20 cabinet posts have changed hands, the most important being the substitution of Georges Bonnet for Vincent Auriol as minister of finance. But Delbos remains in the foreign office and M. Blum himself is made vice president of the cabinet, which means that he will be acting premier whenever Chautemps is absent. The government, in short, remains a Popular Front government, composed of Socialists and Radical Socialists, as was its predecessor.

But when all this is said there remains a real significance in the change. The direction of affairs has been shifted, slightly but perceptibly to the right. The shift is so slight that it is hoped organized labor will not be alienated. Yet it is so perceptible as to encourage the belief that business confidence may be restored.

The factors underlying the current change in the French government, and the staggering load of unsolved problems which Messrs. Chautemps and Bonnet have inherited from Messrs. Blum and Auriol, are subject matter for another article.

not see Jozwiak, was held without charge pending an inquest.

More than 400 pickets gathered at the plant early today to prevent about 450 nonstrikers from returning to work. Company officials had announced their intention of reopening the plant after they said they had received petitions from 446 nonstrikers.

"The protection of life and property is far more important than the reopening of the plant," Larsen declared.

The firm, maker of wicker and chrome furniture and baby carriages, has been closed since June 22, when 306 workers, members of the Menominee Furniture Workers Union, an American Federation of Labor affiliate, called a strike for higher wages.

At Youngstown, Ohio, the Mahoning County grand jury returned indictments against more than 200 persons, including Robert Burke and John Stevens, alias Stevenson, ousted S. W. O. C. organizers.

The charges, lodged after a four-day investigation of "all violence and disorders" in the Ohio steel valley, included carrying concealed weapons, inciting to riot, and removing railroad property.

Burke, a former student at Columbia University, was charged with rioting in connection with battles between pickets and police here, June 10 and June 19.

A three-hour pitched battle was fought between strikers and police June 19 near a plant of the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. Two were killed and more than two score injured.

The reopening of Republic's Cleveland mills, carried out under the protection of 1,000 Ohio National Guardsmen, left only two steel plants still shut down in the Great Lakes strike area extending from Johnstown, Pa., to Indiana Harbor, Ind.

Youngstown Sheet & Tube's mills at Indiana Harbor, employing 7,000 workers, and at East Chicago, employing 700, remained "padlocked." Police reported 380 men were in the Youngstown plant at South Chicago, but the company did not disclose the nature or extent of operations there.

An estimated 3,000 pickets patroled Sheet & Tube's East Chicago plant tonight to prevent attempt at reopening as State and union officials predicted settlement of the strike there "within the next day or two."

At Indianapolis, J. C Argetsinger, vice president and general counsel of Sheet & Tube, emerged late today from a conference with Gov M. Clifford Townsend and said: "Our plant at Indiana Harbor will be reopened at such time as our employes and their families are afforded adequate legal protection."

Townsend, Bittner Confer.

"We haven't signed anything and are not signing anything with anybody," Argetsinger added.

As Argetsinger departed, Gov. Townsend called Van A. Bittner, Chicago regional director for the Steel Workers Organizing Committee, into conference.

All other strike-affected mills in the dispute between John L. Lewis' C. I. O. and "Little Steel"—Republic, Bethlehem, Inland and Youngstown Sheet & Tube—claimed they were speeding operations back to near-peak production once more.

The controversy, which arose over the refusal of independent steel producers to sign labor contracts with Lewis' year-old union, found strike leaders still maintaining they would "fight to the last ditch."

Thousands of men trooped back to work at Bethlehem Steel's Cambria works at Johnstown, which reopened without interference after the three-day holiday.

Jam Employment Offices.

At Youngstown, in the Mahoning Valley, crowds of men gathered at the employment offices to seek jobs in the "struck" plants of both Republic Steel and Sheet & Tube.

Company officials said the men were attracted by a rumor new hands were being hired. The men were informed, however, that for the present no workers not employed prior to the strike were being taken on.

In Cleveland, Republic spokesmen said 3,087 had returned to work during the day out of a normally employed 5,000. They said one 1,000-ton blast furnace had been "blown in" at the Corrigan-McKinney plant and that another would start up tomorrow.

C. I. O. leaders disputed the company's back-to-work figures, asserting many of those who went back to work were merely clerks, stenographers and staff officials—not the actual makers of steel.

Guardsmen in Akron.

Strike chieftains also charged Republic Steel was importing "strike-breakers" from as far away as Alabama.

Several hundred National Guardsmen were stationed today in Akron, rubber manufacturing center unaffected by the steel strike. Adj. Gen. Emil F. Marx said the men would be used in strike areas as needed.

Sheriff Walter P. O'Neill protested to Gov. Martin L. Davey of Ohio that the action "may start trouble in a peaceful community," and said, "They should be removed at once."

A. F. of L. Wins Election.

Philadelphia, July 6 (AP).—The American Federation of Labor today defeated the Committee for Industrial Organization in an election to determine which organization should represent the employes of the Freihofer & Ward Baking companies as their collective bargaining agency.

Th election was arranged by Mayor S. Davis Wilson after the A. F. of L. called a "general holiday" of all truck drivers and teamsters in the Philadelphia and Camden, N. J., area in protest against the C. I. O. invading the bakery field. The "holiday" partly paralyzed the movements of commodities Friday night and caused three morning newspapers in Philadelphia and Camden to suspend publication of their Saturday editions. Under an agreement arranged by the mayor, the "holiday" was ended pending the result of today's election.

Boston Warehouses Reopen.

: Boston, July 6 (AP).—Employers, making their first move to break a 3-week-old strike which has crippled this main wool market of the Nation, today reopened strike-bound warehouses and invited "former employes to return to work without discrimination."

"While the Boston Wool Trade Association reported workers were "drifting back," Union Leader Daniel J. Donovan predicted a "fight to the finish" in the union's closed shop demand.

Strike Shuts Chrysler Plant.

Detroit, July 6 (AP).—Chrysler Corporation's Dodge truck plant here suspended operations today after some members of the United Automobile Workers of America went on strike in protest against a nonunion worker. About 2,100 employes were made idle.

Ford Company and 15 Named In Michigan Assault Warrant

Three Muscle Men Included in List of Eight Employes; U. A. W. to Attempt Again Today to Distribute Literature at Plant.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, July 6.—The Ford Motor Co. and 15 individuals were named in an assault warrant today as the result of a one-man grand jury inquiry into the beating of United Automobile Workers leaders and members trying to distribute literature at Ford's main plant May 26.

The warrant was issued by Common Pleas Judge Ralph W. Liddy a few hours after the National Labor Relations Board opened a hearing on its complaint which charged the Ford Co. with unfair labor practices and with responsibility for "malicious and brutal assaults" on the unionists.

Everett Moore, of the service department which polices Ford property, was one of those named in the warrant. The maximum penalty is five years' imprisonment and a fine of $5,000.

Ford Plea Rejected.

A dispute over whether the riot which resulted in the assault charges took place on public or privately owned property occupied most of the first day of the Labor Board hearing, which got under way after Trial Examiner John T. Lindsay rejected a Ford attorney's plea that the NLBR lacked jurisdiction. The company contended the acts charged in the complaint affected only employes engaged in "local production."

Ford spokesmen have charged union members pressing their organizing campaign May 26 trespassed on company property.

Harry S. Toy, attorney, announced tonight that all but one of the Ford employes named in the warrent issued by Judge Liddy would appear for arraignment at 11 a. m. Thursday. The one, Angelo Caruso, he said, disappeared after the May 26 fighting.

Three Muscle Men.

The warrant naming Moore, eight other Ford employes, the company and six unidentified persons was delivered to a deputy sheriff for service. The other employes named included Warshon Sarkisian, Oscar Jones and Theodore Gries, all formerly identified with professional wrestling or boxing.

Judge Liddy, sitting as a one-man grand jury as permitted by a Michigan statute, heard scores of witnesses, including Harry Bennett, Ford personnel director, over a period of several weeks. The inquiry was started at the request of Duncan C. McCrea, Wayne County prosecutor, and had no connection with the NLRB charges.

As the NLRB hearing proceeded this afternoon, representatives of the U. A. W. announced their original plan to distribute literature at the Ford plant for a second time tomorrow would be carried out.

workers defying the law of the sea and crippling American shipping."

"If they want to have unions and behave like seamen," he said, "then I am not opposed."

The C. I. O. attack on its "fair-weather friends" came in the official organ of the committee, Union News Service, edited by Len DeCaux, who said, in the column, "Looking Ahead:"

"A number of labor's fair-weather friends seem to have run into squalls of late. Reaction's same yelping pack of bloodhounds that but recently was concentrating on Roosevelt and the New Deal, is now hard on the trail of the C. I. O.

Cites Many Contracts.

It said that apparently C. I. O. had not gone too far in obtaining a contract with the United States Steel Corporation "without a single serious strike," in obtaining contracts from 350 textile companies which "have had the intelligence to accord collective rights to their employes," or getting concessions from big corporations in "a dozen other industries."

Labor could not be reproved for violence in the automobile sit-down strike, it continued, because so much valuable machinery would be endangered the companies "did not demand violent attacks upon them which might have destroyed this costly machinery as well as less costly lives."

In the steel strike, however, it added, "the companies had their strikers out in the streets so their machinery was safe." Unarmed pickets were attacked, the article continued, and 13 strikers or strike sympathizers were shot or clubbed to death.

"The violence was more than any fair weather friends could stand, naturally. It was the last straw . . . Really, now, the C. I. O. had gone too far."

"But where do the fair weather liberals come in at a time like this? What red meat have they been eating that they turn so ferociously on the labor victims of reactionary violence?"

Appeal Court Upholds Sale of Croker Estate

New Orleans, July 6 (AP).—The United States Circuit Court of Appeals today upheld a Federal court ruling by Judge John W. Holland in Miami, Fla., ordering foreclosure sale of the estate of Mrs. Richard Croker, widow of the one-time Tammany political leader in New York. The estate was ordered sold to satisfy mortgages.

Bingham's Talk On Despots Stirs Reich Protest

Nazi Paper Assails U. S. Envoy to London for Jabs at Hitler, Duce.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, July 6.—Germany's official news agency distributed throughout the Reich tonight a German newspaper's editorial assailing Robert W. Bingham, United States Ambassador to London, for his speecn on despots yesterday.

The editorial, printed in the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, charged Bingham's speech at an American Independence Day observance in London "incited the so-called democracies against the so-called dictatorships in almost unbelievable fashion."

(Bingham told the American Society in London "despots have forced America and Britain to undertake rearmament and, having undertaken it, we must necessarily win the rearmament race."

("If dictatorships are beter to prepare for wars," the Ambassador said, "democracies are better to finish wars." Bingham's only comment tonight was "I had my say last night and have nothing more to add."

(The London Daily Telegraph said editorially, "Seldom does an Ambassador permit himself in public to use language as emphatic as Mr. Bingham's." Of American aloofness from foreign entanglements, not a word. As the Ambassador sees it, America and Britain stand together resisting the challenge which despotism is offering to democracy.")

Asserting Bingham's speech was "an appeal for competitive armament," the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung declared:

"This diplomat has such a peculiar conception of his official mission and a mentality so foreign to us that it would be a waste of breath to argue with him."

"With an unmistakable reference to Germany and Italy," the paper said, "he spoke of peoples which don't listen to reason and glorify war as a cult."

"Any American diplomat ought to know," it said, "that Germany was forced into rearmament after the others failed to carry out specific treaty provisions calling for disarmament."

Hanfstaengl to Stay Away From Reich

London, July 6 (AP).—Dr. Ernst E. S. Hanfstaengl, former confidant of Reichsfuehrer Hitler and for a long time head of foreign press affairs for the Nazi Party, has no intention of returning to Germany, it was stated authoritatively today.

Friends said he would make such a statement in appearing in court tomorrow in connection with settlement of a libel action instituted by him against the British magazine Cavalcade. The magazine was alleged to have published a statement giving the impression Hanfstaengl was forced to leave Germany.

Boy, 11, Drowned Wading in Potomac

Sterling Bauer, 11, 1948 Naylor road southeast, was drowned late yesterday when he stepped off a sandbar into deep water while wading in the Potomac with three of his chums. Anthony Clement, 12, 1435 Twenty-second street southeast; Robert Tillett, 11, 1514 Nineteenth street southeast, and Eugene Thomas, 12, 2147 Young street southeast.

The body of the boy, who was the son of John M. Baumer, employe of the Southern Railway, was recovered by the Harbor Police between Benning road and the railroad bridge, near the east bank of the river, a short distance from where he disappeared.

Capital Sewerage Plant Improvements to Begin

Plans for rehabilitation of the New Jersey avenue pumping station, part of the District Sewage Disposal Plant, were announced yesterday by the Commissioners.

The improvement will begin immediately, with the Suburban Engineering Co., of New York, as contractor. The Suburban company was lowest bidder, it was reported, at $567,766.01.

Horses Take a Walk; Located by D. C. Police

They were captured by two traffic policemen at Thirteenth and Monroe streets northwest and taken to the Tenth Precinct Station. Later Abell claimed the animals at the pound.

Tom McCarthy

The Postilion, on the Road, Writes Of Job-Hunting, Finding in St. Louis

IT WAS a warm night in St. Louis. An hour earlier, Jim Braddock had lost the championship in Chicago, and now some of the colored boys were driving around the streets celebrating the success of their Joe.

I tried to figure out just what sort of places would be open all night, where a man might get work of some sort. It was shortly after 11 o'clock when I came into Third street, in the market district. While many of the produce houses hadn't opened, a few of them were already unloading fruits and vegetables from heavily laden trucks. I bumped into a man as I picked my way through a narrow lane left open between piles of boxes.

"Watch where you're going," he snarled.

"Sorry, I'm just looking around. Wondered if a guy could pick up a little change loading or unloading the trucks."

"You might," he said, but his tone was still anything but friendly.

I asked him if he were in charge of the darkened market before which we stood. He lifted his hands and displayed a night stick, explaining that he was the watchman, that this market hadn't opened yet, and that I'd better move along.

"Yes, sir," I said, hoping the "sir" would soften him up, "I don't know the ropes down here," I said, "and I'm flat broke. I'd appreciate it if you could give me a tip on getting some work."

"You're broke, eh?" I couldn't see his face in the dark, but I suspected that he was smiling, and not too pleasantly.

"Yes, sir," I said.

"Okay, buddy," his tone changed as he continued, "here's the story. Some of these houses have a regular loading crew. Some don't. Just go around and ask. When you see a truck pull in, run up and ask if they can use you. This place will be open at 1, and if you don't have any luck drop back here then. Meantime, don't bother me."

"Yes, sir; thanks."

* * * *

I WENT around the corner, and entered the first produce house which I found open. Crates of fruits, and sacks of vegetables crowded the barn-like room. There was a little inclosed office in the center of the room and before its window a sweating, shirtless fat man stood complaining in a nasal, rural accent, "So that's all you're paying tonight?"

"Boss' order," the young man in the office said as he jerked his head backward toward a spectacled man writing at a desk.

"And that's every cent they're worth," the spectacled man called without raising his head.

"Okay, boys, unload them anyway," said the fat man, and a crew began to unload sacks of potatoes from the truck at the curb.

I went up to the window of the office and asked the yong man if they would be able to use some extra help. He told me to see the boss.

"Mister," I called past the young man, "I'm hard up and want a job. Can you use some help. I'm a good worker."

The boss raised his head and looked at me hard.

"How many men have you got out there tonight, Ed," he asked the young man.

The young man told him there were four on the crew, and the boss remarked he didn't want to see "that drunk" on the crew much longer.

The boss started to look me over again, so I repeated that I was a good worker, and would really earn whatever he chose to give me.

"I'm busy right now," he said, "but hang around, I want to talk to you later."

* * * *

I WALKED out to the street and watched the lights flash on as the various houses opened up with the approach of midnight. Trucks rambled by over the cobblestones, and as I watched I envied the fellows bending under their loads of produce. A small breeze stirred down the street and it carried with it the rich and various odors of the market. Though it was nearly midnight, the activity was just beginning. Each minute the street became more lively; shouts and laughter echoed out of the yellow-lighted entrances of the storehouses.

While the city slept, huge trucks were roaring over the roads, all heading toward this market, bringing in the food for a great city. Up and down the street men hurried with the unloading of the giant trailers. Higher and higher grew the piles of foodstuffs, narrowing the sidewalk and crowding into the road. The yellow light from the doorways flooded out over the growing mountains of food along the sidewalk. There were Texas onions, their silver skins shining through network sacks; carrots, with soft green tops as delicate as lace; heavy awkward sacks of potatoes from Oklahoma; delicately shaded apricots from California. It wasn't hard to fancy the market as the center of the world, when those huge trucks poured out their loads carried from the four corners of the Nation.

* * * *

"AL LRIGHT son, what's your trouble?" the boss asked me.

"I'm broke," I said, "and I'd like a job. I want to get enough money to eat on tomorrow, and then I can worry about the next day later."

"Where are you from and where are you going?" asked the boss.

"I came out from Washington," I said, "to see the country. I went broke, and now I'm on my way to Kansas to get a job in the harvest. I'm stranded here in St. Louis."

"Came out to see the country," he said, looking at me hard. "Well, you'll really see it, if you're broke." He started to laugh.

"Can you use any help tonight?" I asked, growing impatient.

He told me to keep my shirt on, and then said, "You look pretty strong, and you might be honest. Would you like to work steady?"

"Can I start tonight?" I asked him.

"No," he said, "and you can get that out of your head. I'll advance you money for food, and you can come around tomorrow if you want to really go to work. I've been looking for somebody to take the place of some of the drunks I've got on my loading crew."

"I'm sorry, mister," I said. "I appreciate it, but I've got my heart set on going out to Kansas. I just want a job for now."

"So that's the way it is, eh?" His eyes snapped behind his glasses and his lips tightened. "Sorry, then, I can't use you. Hope you see the country." He turned quickly and went inside.

* * * *

AS I WENT away I could scarcely keep from smiling. While my immediate problem wasn't solved, one thing had been proved. You can land in a town like St. Louis, dressed in little better than tramp fashion and, within three hours, get an offer for a permanent job.

I didn't have much luck in the next hour of drifting from house to house. I probably asked in 30 houses if they could use an extra hand.

Once I asked the same man for a job twice within a half an hour. He was a big man, more than 6 feet 2, but I hadn't recognized him. He looked at me for a long time, as though he might be thinking for an answer, and then, hitting every word hard, he said, "NO HELP NEEDED."

The boss of one produce house was superintending the unloading of crates of melons. He told me to wait around, but when the time passed and he didn't put me to work I began to pester him every few minutes, asking if I could go to work. He began to swear. Then he said, "What's the matter, are you hungry?"

I told him I was.

He called to a man in an apron standing in front of an all night "hole in the wall" restaurant, "Joe, take this kid in and fill him up."

"I don't want any charity," I told him. "If you can't put me to work, I'll go along."

"I can't put you to work," he said.

So I went on down the street.

TOMORROW: McCarthy does five hours of back-breaking work, learns how to stack watermelons properly for display purposes and visits Father Dempsey's Mission.

John R. Pinkett Is Appointed to Welfare Board

Broker Succeeds Mrs. Cook Who Quits After Six Years' Service.

John R. Pinkett, president of a brokerage firm, was appointed yesterday to the Board of Public Welfare, succeeding Mrs. Coralie Franklin Cook, who resigned after six years' service.

Pinkett has been active in social welfare work in the District for many years. He is 48 and a native of Lincolnia, Va. He has six children, three of whom are graduates of Howard University.

After working his way through Amherst College, he taught school in Jackson, Miss., and St. Louis, Mo., and came to Washington in 1900.

Mrs. Cook was appointed to the board in 1931 and reappointed in 1934. Both she and her husband, the late Dr. George Cook, were active for many years in civic and charity work. Dr. Cook was a member of the old District Board of Charities.

Pinkett is also a member of the board of directors of the Twelfth street Y. M. C. A., treasurer of the Southeast Community House and a member of the Community Chest executive committee.

4 New England States Sign Flood Compacts

Boston, July 6 (AP).—Interstate flood control compacts, providing for construction of ten reservoirs in the Connecticut and Merrimack Valleys at a total cost of $20,543,800, were in effect tonight between Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Vermont and Connecticut.

Signing of the compacts today, in the offices of Gov. Charles F. Hurley, completed the initial step toward the realization of a plan designed to prevent a repetition of the 1936 floods which ravaged those river valleys.

New Aircraft Carrier On Second Trial Run

Newport News, Va., July 6 (AP).—The U. S. S. Yorktown, aircraft carrier, steamed off the Virginia Capes today on the second of her builder's trial cruises. The carrier is expected to return to her berth at the plant of Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. not later than noon tomorrow.

In addition to shipyard officials, Capt. Ernest D. McWhorter, U. S. N., who has been assigned to command the vessel after she is commissioned, and other naval personnel were aboard.

Thieves Get $900 In Latest of Series Of Safe-Crackings

Yeggmen who are believed to have cracked more than 25 safes here within three months staged another successful job early yesterday.

Cracking the safe in the Capital Beverage Co. 616 Rhode Island avenue northeast, they escaped with about $600 in bills and $300 worth of checks.

The robbery was reported to police by Christ Theodore Kopsidas, 2415 Twentieth street northeast, president of the firm.

Investigation by police showed the safe was opened by the "punch" method, which is the same as that employed on the safe in Nunnally Candy Co., 1208 F street northwest, which was burgled early Monday. The men took $1,100 on this job.

No fingerprints have been obtained on any of the broken strong boxes. Police believe the jobs are the work of an expert out-of-town gang.

Uniforms and clothing valued at $166 were taken from his automobile last night, Lieut. Blin Vanmater, U. S. N., of 2101 New Hampshire avenue northwest, reported to police.

Palestine Tense As Division Nears

Jerusalem, July 6 (AP).—Excitement mounted tonight on the eve of a report by a British Royal Commission expected to recommend partition of the Holy Land into three areas.

Extensive military preparations were made in case of an emergency. Lieut. Gen. Sir George Weir, commander of British troops in Egypt, arrived here to confer with Lieut. Gen. John G. Dill, ranking officer in Jerusalem. Seven British regiments, approximately 7,000 men, and about 3,000 police reserves were held in readiness.

It was believed the Palestine commission's report would propose the Holy Land be divided into a Jewish state, an Arab state and a territory under British mandate from the League of Nations.

Vanderlip Son to Wed Kentucky Girl July 16

New York, July 6 (AP).—Kelvin C. Vanderlip, 25-year-old son of the late Frank A. Vanderlip, international banker, who died last Tuesday, obtained a license today to marry Miss Candace Alig, 25-year-old Louisville-born daughter of Otto F. Alig. A Princeton graduate now in the real estate business, Vanderlip said the ceremony will be performed here July 16.

Merritt Becomes Editor.

New York, July 6 (AP).—Abraham Merritt, associate editor of the American Weekly for the past 26 years, was appointed editor in chief today by William Randolph Hearst to fill the post of the late Morrill Goddard.

Nazis Arrest Aide Of Jailed Minister

Berlin, July 6 (AP).—Police today arrested an official of the Rev. Martin Niemoeller's church at Dahlem, presumably on the allegation he circulated a petition affirming the congregation's support of their arrested pastor.

The petition for presentation to the ministry of justice was signed at Sunday's church services.

Niemoller, Protestant Confessional pastor, arrested for allegedly "inciting to disobedience in state institutions," sent word from jail to his congregation not to "lament but to praise and thank God."

Holiday Revelers Approach Record In Police Court

A near record was established in the United States branch when 38 locked-up cases appeared o nthe docket wit hsix persons out on bond and ten othesr who posted collateral.

In the District branch, 102 persons were arraigned, most of them charged with intoxication. Charges against 168 others due to appear were closed when the defendatns forfeited collateral.

Forty-nine persons were arrested ove rthe week-end for shooting fireworks. Of this number, 45 forfeited $5 collateral each and 4 appeared in court. All four either received suspended sentences or had their personal bonds accepted.

Wainwright Bonded.

Boston, July 6 (AP).—A United States commissioner today held Morton Wainwright, of Winthrop, former deputy U. S. Marshal in Seattle, in $5,000 bond on a charge of sending threatening letters to President Roosevelt. Wainwright was arrested last week by Secret Service agents.

Why us Mileage Merchants get twice the average share of Oil Customers

Out of all the people coming in, a Conoco Mileage Merchant like me will make twice as many regular oil customers as a station that cannot do Oil-Plating! You'll see a big reason why, when your Oil-Plated engine cuts out a lot of your stopping for oil. Besides rolling up mileage, Conoco Germ Processed oil puts a finish to all the worst wear from your fast Summer driving. That's not just talk—because Oil-Plating is a lot more than any so-called oil film. The patent Germ Process not only makes the strongest kind of regular oil film, but gives you Oil-Plating entirely extra .... something no other oil does! Oil-Plating fastens direct to cylinders, bearings and shafts, like any real plating. Then there's sure to be good lubrication for every start you make—even a hundred times a day—because Oil-Plating simply can't run down while your car is stopped. And it can't scrape off, burn through, or get blasted out, no matter how far you speed on baking-hot days. I'll put in Conoco Germ Processed oil right now, and bet you'll be back here yourself, telling me all the mileage and fun you get from your Oil-Plated engine.

"281 North Howland."

The flight of Amelia Earhart, which was started "just for fun," has already engaged the services of the British freighter Moorby, the Navy mine-sweeper Swan, the Coast Guard cutter Itasca, the battleship Colorado, as well as the attention of innumerable radio operators, and the hopes of a sympathetic world. Frankly setting out on a round-the-world flight without a mission or scientific objective in sight, Miss Earhart has at least proved one fact—that man, with every known apparatus for safe flying available, has not yet succeeded in foreseeing and forestalling all slip-ups.

But in spite of the fact that Miss Earhart may accomplish nothing more on this flight than to center all eyes on her plight, it may be said to the credit of a humane world that no stone has been left unturned toward her rescue. Perhaps this is due to the sheer vicarious thrill of adventure which the thought of flying over unknown seas offers to the average grounded human being. More likely, it is induced by the personality of Miss Earhart herself who has never been lacking in courage and an almost incredible zest for living.

This is indeed no time to carp on the futility of such air journeys as that undertaken by our best-known feminine flier. Its tragic portent is now the only concern of a waiting nation. Let it be hoped that what Miss Earhart once termed her "incredible luck" will bring her through this mishap safely. If not, her indomitable courage will certainly buoy her and her flying partner to the end.

The Gentle Tiger.

In an Independence Day address Senator Wagner dubbed Tammany Hall the "cradle of modern liberalism in America." From its wigwam, we are told, trail-blazing pioneers set out a generation ago to make the industrial wilderness safe for the working man.

Nobody would deny that men like Senator Wagner and former Gov. Smith are entitled to a large amount of credit for their courageous and determined efforts to put through enlightened social legislation. It strains credulity, however, to be told that their liberal ideas were acquired from the bosses of Tammany Hall. Indeed, it is doubtful whether these intrepid path-finders went forth with the blessings of their fellow braves. Of course, when they returned to the reservation with public acclaim, it would have been most unwise to scowl at them too openly or jeer too indiscreetly. A liberal sometimes comes in handy, too, when voters become outraged by a thoroughly reactionary political organization and demand reforms.

The wisdom of forbearance—even if it means accepting certain measures that are anathema to spoilsmen—is shown in the way Tammany has clung fondly to Senator Wagner and now seeks to proclaim him its candidate for Mayor of New York City. The organization has indeed fallen on lean days when it no longer dares to rely upon promises of loaves and fishes to elect its candidate, and is forced to shine in the reflected glory of its errant liberals.

The public is curious to know why Senator Wagner paid his glowing tribute to Tammany at a time when its leadership is thoroughly discredited and is openly angling for votes at any price. Was he speaking soothing words to cover a retreat from a position which Tammany is trying to force upon him? Or was he trying to persuade himself and the voters that the tiger is really a lamb in disguise with whom a liberal may safely lie down?

Pish And A Little Poosh.

In Oklahoma City recently a former utilities magnate was found living in seclusion on the modest income he was able to earn by writing poems and essays. He told his discoverer that he wouldn't swap his present comfort for all the millions he had once owned.

The odd and interesting feature of this story is that this deposed executive probably told the truth. Conceding his sincerity and utterly dismissing the possibility that the gentleman is kidding himself, where do the facts leave us?

Well, first, they leave us with the material for a "moral" story containing just enough truth to be mawkishly unfair, its implications being that the pursuit of wealth has in it a smack of wickedness and that true happiness can be found only in some cultural pursuit. There is equal temptation, with as much backing of fact, to be unfair in the opposite direction by declaring that here is a man who very simply prefers tranquillity to responsibility.

The truth, at a guess, is probably that a wayward chance demonstrated to this particular individual that he had been a square plug in a round hole and that adversity put him where he properly belonged and where he could be happy. Only this and nothing more.

For a utilities magnate (molder of epics) might conceivably keep his millions and still write poems and essays. The world is full of men willing to sell bread and buy a hyacinth—so long as it doesn't happen to be the very last loaf.

Symbolizing The New Era.

Not the least notable of the oratorical efforts occasioned by this year's celebration of Independence Day was the speech made at Buenos Aires by Dr. Carlos Saavedra Lamas, Nobel peace prize winner and foreign minister of the Argentine republic.

There have been times in the past when relations between the United States and the Argentine, while invariably correct and peaceful, have been lacking in that cordiality which marked our dealings with certain other Latin-American republics. For more than half a century, for instance, the Argentine took the lead in criticism of certain American policies. No nation was more vehement and persistent in its opposition to the Monroe Doctrine. None took more earnestly to its bosom the bogey of Yankee imperialism.

But all that belongs to the unhappy past, if Dr. Saavedra Lamas' Fourth of July speech is any indication. No Latin-American statesman has ever been more enthusiastically a partisan of United States democracy than the Argentine foreign minister revealed himself to be on this occasion. At a time when democracy is under a cloud and Fascism has been making headway in so many Latin-American nations, Dr. Saavedra Lamas held up the United States as an example for the whole hemisphere to follow. He said:

> It was the United States which gave us the structure of our institutions, which we copied with small variations. We must continue to seek in the United States the form for their application, for their practice, for their respect and for their esteem . . . The great Republic of the North, a magnificent spectacle of human progress, continues to be in the contemporary world a creation that has never been surpassed in its political genius. In its incessant progress it is a magnificent lesson for all humanity as regards respect for equality, citizenship and democracy. They are and will continue to be our teachers.

And if this glowing tribute was not enough, Dr. Saavedra Lamas also went out of his way to make a deep bow in the direction of the Monroe Doctrine. Abandoning altogether the once fashionable Latin-American theory that it was simply the spearpoint of United States imperialism, he accepted as valid the spirit and letter of the good neighbor policy so earnestly pursued by the present Administration. And he lifted from President Monroe's famous statement of policy the taint which has so frequently been assigned to it in South America.

With the United States agreeing to abstain from intervention in the internal affairs of any neighboring nations, the Monroe Doctrine, as supplemented by Theodore Roosevelt's "big stick" policy, is dead. But in the opinion of the Argentine statesman the original Monroe Doctrine continues to have a great role to play in inter-American affairs as a "retaining dam" to keep out un-American tendencies that would weaken the principles of republicanism and democracy in this hemisphere. Said he:

> The republic is, and always will be, as Monroe desired, the invariable form of all the governments of America. It must not be upset by outside currents nor by followers of the institutional regimes which are based on the new ideologies which are circulating in our atmosphere today.

It is clear from such remarks that the strong defense of democracy made by President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull at the Buenos Aires conference last December has not fallen on stony ground. The speech of Saavedra Lamas is but one of a number of indications that the tide of fascism in Latin America is now ebbing.

In The Name Of Democracy?

In opening the debate on the Administration's compromise judiciary bill, it should be realized, Senator Robinson was under a severe handicap. First, he had to plead with the Senate to settle down to business in the face of a do-nothing policy during the last six months for which he is partially responsible. Second, he had to make the best possible case for a measure that has already been thoroughly discredited in the eyes of the public.

Senator Robinson's dislike for filibustering is shared by a great majority of the American people. That practice is associated in the public mind with selfish attempts on the part of one or a very few individuals to defeat the will of the majority in Congress. In the present case, however, no less than 43 Senators wish to discuss this vital measure at length before any vote is taken. This prospective debate should be carefully distinguished from filibustering. Since the Administration is determined to go forward with this ill-considered venture, the national interest demands the fullest and freest discussion in Congress.

It will be time enough to denounce filibuster tactics when legitimate discussion has ended. Even then the Administration forces will find it difficult to bring the opposition movement into disfavor. Mr. Robinson points out that stalling to prevent legislative action cannot be justified by those who believe in democratic government. But the same may be said with much greater emphasis of packing the Supreme Court to influence its opinions.

The Senate leader is in a very difficult position to be talking about the principles of democratic government. The very essence of a constitutional democracy is a system of independent courts. Since the purpose of this bill, even in its modified form, is to nullify the influence of justices whose decisions do not please the President, it is entirely out of keeping with the spirit and form of democracy. How can the Senate leader reasonably insist upon democratic procedure in considering a bill to undermine democracy?

Opponents of the bill have considered dilatory tactics only because of the extraordinary nature of the fight they are called upon to make. To most, if not all, of them filibustering is abhorrent. But the idea of a subservient judiciary, or any encroachment upon the independent judgment of the Supreme Court, is far more abhorrent. When Senator Robinson opens a fight of this sort with an appeal for democratic procedure he cuts the ground from under his own feet.

If the contest on this issue becomes a desperate struggle, if it ruthlessly tears asunder the bonds now holding discordant elements within the Democratic Party, the result will not be attributable to any filibuster. Rather it will have to be assigned to the inexplicable determination of the President to drive this measure through the Senate without regard to consequences. A desperate course of action has been chosen, and it automatically gives rise to bitter and uncompromising opposition.

Only Itself To Blame.

Repeated criticism by Administration leaders of the strike tactics recently employed by the C. I. O. has given rise to reports of a "break" between the President and John L. Lewis. Leaders of the steel strike are undoubtedly perturbed over the turn events have taken. Presumably they are disgruntled because the Administration failed to support the coercive policy by which they sought to organize the steel industry. With virtually all of the steel mills operating once more, and troops protecting men who wish to return the work, C. I. O. chieftains are said to feel that the President has let them down.

A basis for their complaint may be found in Secretary Roper's address as well as the recent remarks of President Roosevelt and Secretary of Labor Perkins. "The people will not long patiently forbear unnecessary strife and disturbance," said Mr. Roper, "no matter by whom provoked. . . . The proper right to strike must be safeguarded, but equally fundamental is the right to work." To this he added that it is the inescapable duty of the Government to protect the community against "lawlessness of all kinds."

Secretary Roper was just as impartial as was President Roosevelt in his "plague-on-both-your-houses" statement. Every one knows that the Administration is entirely out of sympathy with the hard-boiled attitude of the independent steel companies. Its new role of impartial critic is significant chiefly because it appears to leave John L. Lewis out on a limb, at least so far as the extremist tactics employed in recent strikes are concerned.

Presumably both Miss Perkins and Mr. Roper had discussed the matter with the President before their positive statements against violence in labor disputes were made public. Otherwise, Secretary Perkins would not likely have taken such a determined stand against the sit-down strike. Indications are that Mr. Roosevelt, in turn, had listened to a chorus of protest against C. I. O. methods during the Jefferson Island jamboree. It seems reasonable to conclude, therefore, that the new policy represents a consensus of opinion among a considerable group of Administration leaders.

If this official denunciation of the C. I. O.'s strike tactics is a severe blow to that organization, its leaders have only themselves to blame. Mr. Lewis has taken unfair advantage of his political affiliations with the New Deal. He realized, of course, that his attempts to win the strike by laying siege to plants and challenging public authority would be embarrassing to the President. Yet he did not hesitate to pursue that policy. Having sown the wind, he should not now protest if he reaps the whirlwind.

Whatever criticism is due the Administration in this matter should be directed at its delay in repudiating coercive tactics. Certainly Mr. Roosevelt cannot be justly accused of any lack of sympathy with the labor cause.

There is an important lesson for the C. I. O. in these events. In this country no group can assume that its political support to any candidate will give it a license to flout the law and resort to violence when negotiations fail. If that lesson means a "break" between the C. I. O. and the New Deal, the split cannot be too quickly effected. Indeed, it is generally conceded that the law should be amended to prevent labor groups from contributing to the campaign expenses of candidates who might later be called upon for special favors.

A milkman's power of deduction runs considerably below norm. He will continue to deposit milk on the front steps until there is an aggregation of 17 quarts before it occurs to him that maybe the customer is away on vacation or something.

Nice Kitty!

Regarding "Liberals."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Now that the annual prizefight is out of the way, our all-American sucker public can once more give its valued attention to affairs of state.

The most succulent item for consideration is that great meeting of liberals, flippantly called New Deal Democrats, held on a lonely island in the Chesapeake.

But, after all, what is a liberal? Those of us who try in all sincerity to get to the bottom of things are well acquainted with a type of person termed "superficial." This insect, without invitation, flits about our preserve, sipping here and there very sparingly, then camps beside us and stings us with hare-brained conclusions to all the knotty questions that ever puzzled man. This type of person is jumpy and unsettled, too impatient to collect his facts with care, and consequently unable ever to find a correct solution except by chance. "God made him; therefore let him pass for a man;" this we must say in charity.

In the meantime, Nero fiddles while Rome burns, and some historians charge the old boy set fire to it himself, or ordered it so. Class war, confiscation of property, vilification of the courts, nullification of the Constitution, degradation by rum and relief, and enslavement in debt, both public and private—these are some of the fruits of liberalism.

And your true liberal will defend my right to say that this is so.

RICHARD L. FELDMAN.

Subversive Element.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Godfrey Monroe, in a recent letter to The Post, seems to imply that all benefactors of "the people," including the early Christians, met with the same criticism and "abuse" which has been offered the C. I. O. He no doubt refers, among other things, to the incident recorded in Acts XVII: 6, when citizens of Thessalonica "took unto themselves certain lewd fellows of the baser sort, and gathered a company, and set the city in an uproar"—familiar tactics—with the accusation. "These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also."

In these perilous and pagan times of ours, when the Christian Church is not only assaulted by the heathen from without, but undermined by traitors within its ranks, when the church militant seems to be an outworn and outmoded idea, like the horse and buggy—in such a time, if ever, it needs defenders against those imitation benefactors who compare the church with the C. I. O., Christianity with communism, and the Christ with Karl Marx.

At the time above referred to, only about 20 years after the Crucifixion, the Christians were neither numerous nor powerful enough to have been accued, even figuratively, of having "turned the world upside down." On the contrary, there is every reason to believe it was the purpose of some who were so doing, to divert attention from themselves in this manner, and to make some one else the "goat."

If Mr. Monroe will study the history of the past and present, he can surely find something more worthy of praise and adulation than tactics and technique such as resulted in the so-called French revolutions—revolutions manufactured deliberately and with malice aforethought by those same subversives who have been endeavoring for far more than 20 centuries, to "turn the world upside down."

GALEN HIETT SWIMLEY.
Bunker Hill, W. Va., July 4.

Machine's Consequences.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your correspondent, Kate Richards O'Hara, who boasts that she originated the sit-down strike, writing in this column today says:

> Labor-saving machinery has placed human labor in a desperate situation—one-third of our population ill-fed, ill-clad, ill-housed, millions on relief and relief appropriations being cut.

How does she account for the fact that about 10,000,000 workers, one-fourth of our gainfully employed today, owe their jobs to new industries brought about largely by the introduction of machine methods?

How does she account for the fact that the Federal unemployment census of 1930 reports that less than 4 per cent blame machines for loss of jobs?

Again, how will she distinguish between labor-saving machines and labor saving?

Finally, during this period of the greatest introduction of machines the world has ever seen, how does she account for the tremendous increase in wages and the shortening of hours, both objectives we all are praying for?

In other words, isn't Miss O'Hara simply repeating a statement by a political leader, who must constantly keep some objective enemy before the people for them to shoot at, just as the Bolsheviks created capitalism as an enemy; the Nazis created the Jews, Masons and Catholics as enemies, and Mussolini is now stirring the Italian masses over alleged insults of Great Britain?

Nazi Propaganda.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The American people owe a debt of gratitude to Congressmen John W. McCormack and Emanuel Celler for their splendid and instructive dialogue of July 2 over WJSV, showing the activities of the Nazis in our country.

Indeed, the Nazi propaganda is increasing here, since unscrupulous agents are agitating here, some under the mask of preachers, lecturers or scientists, others as diplomats. The ill-famed secret police has its agents all over this country watching those who have left their native country because of religious or racial persecution. Huge amounts of money are spent for propaganda in our stronghold of democracy, which they scorn openly.

Who pays for their vile propaganda? The American people. A few years ago we invested hundreds of millions of dollars in Germany which are now lost forever. Not even interest is paid to the American bondholders or to the American Government. The money is spent for spreading of hatred against Catholics, Jews and freedom here, for bloody and criminal adventures, as in Spain.

Let us be vigilant that the Nazi pest which has brought so much hardship not only to the honest part of the German people, but also to Spain, may not spread its poisonous germs over our free country.

The Chicago Police.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "Hurrah for the Chicago police!" cries Mr. F. W. Garrett in July 5 Post. But let me enlighten him. The same truncheons that drove the souls out of the bodies of 10 innocent workers may soon be beating at his own head, whether he is an employe or employer. If an employe, the truncheons may be wielded by the Fascists; if employer, by a thoroughly aroused humanity. Let him always bear in mind that nearly all of our wealth is in the hands of few on one hand and an overwhelming majority of have-nots on the other. Two camps, directly opposed to each other. Since history repeats itself and class antagonism is rapidly coming to a climax, anything may happen. 1776 is still our rich, revolutionary heritage. Rome and Berlin are the cities to voice Mr. Garret's opinions, not here.

The Press On Spain.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I want to agree wholeheartedly with the letter by James Fehler in The Post of July 1. The American press is certainly displaying a very unfair attitude, especially in its reporting of the Spanish war.

It was charged by the Rev. Dr. Bernard Grimley, editor of the Catholic Times of London, at a mass meeting in Madison Square Garden, that 15,700 religious, men and women, have been murdered by the leftists since the start of the Spanish war. This mass meeting was under auspices of the American Committee for Spanish Relief and was attended by about 15,000. It didn't get any publicity.

"They were not killed in war, or by the sad accidents of war," declared Dr. Grimley, "but in cold-blooded house to house visitations in search of class enemies. It has meant death to own a crucifix, to have a holy picture on the wall——"

The official figures from Rome of the number of priests estimated to have been killed in Spain since the Reds came into power were published in the papers in a very modest way on the back pages. How much editorial indignation did it arouse? If it was commented on at all, it was to "deplore" such happenings in a mild manner and let it drop.

If ten Jewish rabbies were savagely murdered by a Nazi mob in any German city it would be front page news and denunciations would rightly go up from one corner of this land to the other. But the systematic extermination of the Spanish clergy by the leftists seems to be taken for granted as something they had coming to them.

The brutal murder of 14-year-old Leonora Sanchez in Vera Cruz when the police broke up a secret and forbidden mass, couldn't bring forth one editorial peep about religious persecution and the denial of freedom of worship in Mexico, one of the nations that the "democratic" press here treats with kid gloves.

Pens Of The Mighty.

The man who once shook the hand that shook the hand of Coolidge may now have a rival in the prideful owner of the pen with which Gov. Sawbuck signed a bill providing for a new bridge over Catfish Creek. The demand for gubernatorial pens has become so great that in Albany the other day Gov. Lehman had to use ten different pens in signing a single bill. About one and one-half letters to the pen.

Apparently the pen has become not only mightier than the sword but also more in demand as a souvenir. If this collecting custom becomes much worse, it will drive taxpayers to penury. But perhaps the pen manufacturers, profiting from mass production, will develop a cheap pen that looks grand but will be useful for only about one letter of an official's signature.

Yet walls decorated with pens that made history would be scarcely more dreary than those now adorned with mounted cow horns or stuffed fish. The horns have lost their points, and some of the fish have become pretty dusty about the gills. Being bored with the history of a prized pen could be no worse than having to hear recited the story of a host's prowess as an angler or as the top hand of Brushtail Ranch.

Some day, though, there is likely to be a revolution. Its successful leader will be the first Governor who dares to sign a bill with his own pen, to write his whole name with the same pen and then calmly to place the pen back in his pocket, where it will be available for further use, even for writing a postcard to his mother-in-law.

AL AND THE HEIGHTS.

("Escorted by his kinfolks, the Marshes and Mulvihills, former Gov. Smith was taken down the Dublin-Galway road to the moat country of County Westmeath, where his grandparents lived. There he saw the thatched cottage where his grandmother was born."—News item.)

Al's had his kicks tremendous
And he's known his moments high;
There have been occasions many
When his derby hit the sky;
He has made some stirring journeys,
And of thrills he's had a load,
But that trip was "tops," I'm thinking,
Down the Dublin-Galway road!

II.

Up the tracks beside the Hudson
Was a journey in his stride;
Very often did he take it
And it filled his heart with pride;
He got quite close to the White House—
To the very doors he strode,
But these travels didn't stir him
Like the Dublin-Galway road.

III.

Long he sang about the East Side
And the West Side of New York
Where he knew each lane and alley,
Every avenue and fork;
What a trip from Fulton Market
To the gates of Washington!
Sure, 'twas great, but it had nothing
On the Dublin-Galway one!

IV.

Hark to "Boys and Girls Together" . . .
Now it sweeps the Irish hills
As the Knight of the Brown Derby
Meets with something new in thrills;
With the Mulvihills and Marshes,
Irish kinfolks, in the morn,
Down the Dublin-Galway road to Where his grandmother was born!

V.

Ah, the Mulvihills and Marshes!
To their company he clings,
For they seem a little grander
Than the presidents and kings.
All the glamour of the kingdoms,
All the glory and the bliss
Of the past . . . "Hey, out the window!"—
For they can't compare with this!

Widening Terror.

News that the Russian terror has been extended to the Uzbek Republic serves to recall that what is now this Uzbek Republic contains the tomb of Tamerlane, for the famed City of Samarkand was his capital. From it he made the expeditions that resulted in conquests until, as his domain has been described, he was master from the Volga to the Persian Gulf, from the Hellespont to the Ganges.

Timur Leng ("Timur the Lame," hence Tamerlane) was born about six centuries ago. He died in 1405. His life demonstrated the power of the ruthless man who is the strongest among the strong, but his career made no permanent impression upon the affairs of the world. Six centuries hence will that be the verdict upon the strong and ruthless man who is today responsible for the slaughter in an empire as large as the portion of the globe which passed under the sway of Tamerlane?

Apology for Revolt

By Herbert Southworth

ANY book on Spain gathers a certain interest about it in these pre-war days and this book is no exception to that generalization. To be sure, it will disappoint that interest, but Mr. Rogers carries a heavy load and when he stumbles, we must remember his burdens. Here is a man of conservative outlook (he calls the strikes that took place before the military revolt "evidences of chaos") and by the cruel pushing of circumstance, he is made to defend an armed military uprising against the democratically elected government of Spain. This man is intellectually confused through circumstance, not through nature. Indeed, "he is absolutely honest in his opinions," says Col. Theodore Roosevelt in the introduction. Small wonder that this Spanish war, which has made Loyalists out of radicals, and rebels out of Fascists and die-hards, should upset the strict standards of Mr. Rogers of the Philippines Free Press.

In his defense of rebellion from the Right, Mr. Rogers first wants to prove his own love for democracy. "I am a liberal," he says. "I am a firm believer in democracy." Bluntly put, but that is his style. So noticeable indeed, that Francis Talbot, S. J., who contributes the preface, says, "Mr. Rogers writes a simple, unadorned story, and his simplicity is the strongest argument in favor of his authenticity." Certainly a dubious standard for historical appraisal!

Anyway, to be a liberal one must do more than affirm the fact, however simply. One must take a liberal stand and that Mr. Rogers does not know how to do. Would a liberal (even the mild and guarded sort) suggest, as Mr. Rogers does, that Gil Robles might have saved Spain in 1933? Fortune Magazine says of this suggested savior: "Gil Robles was a Fascist in the true Fascist tradition. He borrowed the tools of Mussolini and copied the methods of Hitler. Confronted with the reality of the republic, he proposed to use it; to transform it or to destroy it." Just how liberal is Mr. Rogers?

MR. ROGERS quotes with approval J. L. Garvin. Does he think Americans do not recognize the editor of the London Observer as the most pro-Hitler of the British editors?

There are certain facts about the Spanish war too well known, even to excuse the misstatement of Mr. Rogers. He says the mass of the Spanish people support the rebel Franco. The Foreign Policy Reports for January 15, 1937, said, "Franco's evident dependence on foreign troops indicates that the government commands far wider popular support than the rebels." In Harper's for July, 1937, Geoffrey Cox, of the London News-Chronicle, says of Franco's failure to take Madrid: "Why did Franco not bring up more men? The truth was that he did not have them to bring up. Had the people of Spain really been on his side he would have had plenty of troops."

Mr. Rogers criticizes the French government for asking Gil Robles to leave at the outbreak of the revolt. But he does not speak harshly of Portugal, which country gave him refuge, and where Kluckhohn, of the New York Times, found him in August signing checks in payment for the German munitions which poured across the Portuguese border and enabled Franco to push the poorly equipped militiamen back to Madrid.

Mr. Rogers mentions Juan March as "the celebrated banker." Now I have seen Juan March's name hundreds of times, but that is the first time I have ever seen him called anything but a smuggler. Fortune Magazine calls him "the foremost enemy of the republic and its most inveterate ill-wisher." But surely for Mr. Rogers, any man who gives $70,000,000 to the Fascist cause is worthy of the title, "a celebrated banker."

• • • •

THERE is a frightening confusion about this book. I mean the careless, perhaps deliberate, confusing of the words Anarchist and Communist. There is a wide difference between the two and intelligent people recognize it. As Mr. Rogers uses the words, they betray the worried indignation of his mind; they do not convey information. It is not fair to speak vaguely of people bought with "Moscow gold" and offer no specific proofs. It is disingenuous to deny that Franco is a Fascist and then add that he merely believes in the "totalitarian state." It is begging the question to say that if Franco had not started the revolt, the "Communist and Anarchists" would have; a statement like that demands proof and Mr. Rogers does not have it, nor does Michael Williams nor Douglas Jerrold.

Mr. Rogers is perturbed over the possible fate of the church, but churches and monasteries were burned in the Carlist wars long before Marx became a major Spanish prophet. In the twelfth century, at the holiest place in Spain, Santiago de Compostela, the archbishop was besieged by his parishioners and his tower fired.

• • • •

THOSE reactionaries who tremble for Spanish art today (as does Mr. Rogers) should note that Pablo Picasso, the greatest living

SPANISH LOYALIST.

Spanish painter, is on the government side. When the readers of this page hear atrocity cried about in the streets, let them think back to that August morning of last year when Federico Garcia Lorca, the greatest of the younger Spanish poets, was led out by the soldiers of the "saviour of Spain," Francisco Franco, and shot because his brother-in-law had been elected by the people of Granada to be their mayor.

Those of us who desire the truth about the Spanish war must put our faith somewhere and what can we trust more readily than the honesty of the artist? When men of the intellectual integrity of Van Wyck Brooks, Archibald MacLeish, Ernest Hemingway, John Gunther, Thomas Mann, Andre Malraux and Ralph Bates stand with the Spanish government, the book readers of the world will doubtless open Mr. Rogers' book (if they open it at all) with hearty approval of the strange words of Sir Willmott Lewis, who contributes the foreword: "I know nothing save the title of the book for which this is written as a foreword, and with its conclusions, if it draws any, I imagine I should strongly disagree."

Surely the strangest foreword a book ever carried!

Dr. Johnson on Book Reviewers

"There is a certain race of men that either imagine it their duty, or make it their amusement, to hinder the reception of every work of learning or genius, who stand as sentinels in the avenues of fame, and value themselves upon giving ignorance and envy the first notice of a prey.

To these men, who distinguish themselves by the appellation of critics, it is necessary for an author to find some means of recommendation. It is probable that the most malignant of these persecutors might be somewhat softened and prevailed on for a short time to remit their fury. Having for this purpose considered many expedients, I find in the records of ancient times that Argus was lulled by music and Cerberus quieted with a sop, and am therefore inclined to believe that modern critics, who, if they have not the eyes, have the watchfulness of Argus, and who bark as loud as Cerberus, though they perhaps cannot bite with equal force, might be subdued by methods of the same kind. I have heard that some have been pacified with claret and a supper, and others laid asleep with the soft notes of flattery." (Dr. Johnson in "The Rambler.")

Leon Blum's Thesis of Marriage

Vice Premier of France Airs His Views on Monogamy.

By Countess Waldeck.

Author of "Prelude to the Past."

"I used to be fond of following women, in the first place as a hobby in my capacity as an indifferent idler, relying on chance to give me some objective for my solitary walks abroad; in the next place as a fancy, in my capacity as sentimental dreamer, looking out at every street corner for an adventure which might change the whole course of my life . . ."

Thus Leon Blum, now vice premier of France, starts off on one of the many incidents which go to prove the thesis of his book, "Marriage:" the thesis that all men and women go through a polygamous period when they are young and that they had better postpone marriage until this period is over. This particular incident is intensely personal, indeed. After following the lady—she is very young, fragile and in black—through the Paris boulevards he finally approaches her, learns that she has two hours before leaving by train for home, asks her to spend these two hours with him. "Delighted, but what are we going to do?" the young and fragile lady asks. "I didn't know what to suggest, so I said nothing," the writer modestly reveals. But the lady knows a hotel quite near, where she and her husband sometimes spend a night. "I escorted her obediently to the establishment in accordance with her directions," Leon Blum relates, and "In a very short space of time, as the sequel to a few traditional processes whose speed and ease staggered me, we found ourselves in a condition which, being the kind of person I was, I should never have expected to attain until after weeks of sentimental siege . . ."

Unfortunately, as he later finds out, the young and fragile lady was the wife of a close friend, recently married. Why did she behave so casually? the heartbroken writer asks. For "my lady friend of an hour was no sensualist. I remembered how unemotional she looked, with what indifference, what abstraction so to speak . . ."

delivering a speech at Poissey, France, in front of a portrait of himself.

And he concludes that her husband must have been a clumsy lover who treated her "with ceremonious but hasty awkwardness." "A married woman is protected by the love which she feels, or at least by the love which she foresees and awaits. A girl is protected by her virginity and her ignorance. But how can you attach the least value to a piece of mimicry made commonplace by its daily repetition, which arouses neither enjoyment, eagerness nor any other emotion and has ceased even to cause suffering or disturbance," he comments.

A wise and candid humaneness gives "Marriage" a value beyond the fact that the man who wrote it 30 years ago has been premier of France yesterday, is vice premier today, will possibly be premier again tomorrow.

Leon Blum was 33 when the book was first printed in 1907. He was one of the bright young men who graced the boulevards and salons of Paris. Though the Affaire Dreyfus had roused his interest in public affairs, he hadn't yet envisaged a political career. Though he was already close to Jean Jaures, leader of the French Socialist Party, whose successor he was to become, the spirit in which "Marriage" is written is un-Marxist to a point where economics are not even mentioned. "Marriage" is written by a bourgeois esthetic for a bourgeois elite.

Marriage, Leon Blum thinks, is not a bad institution, but a badly regulated institution. Marriage is legalized monogamy, and monogamy in normal men and women answers only to a belated condition of the affections and senses. Therefore, Leon Blum suggests that people should not marry until they feel ready for marriage—id est until craving for change and adventure has given place to a taste for stability, unity and sentimental repose. He overlooks the fact that, humans being what they are, their polygamous instincts never die. Polygamous and monogamous periods alternate with one another—and while a man in his forties may be a perfect monogamist, he may revert to polygamy in his fifties.

Besides, there are other reasons why marriage may fail besides sexual incompatibility. For instance, incompatibility of opinions and sentiments and economic difficulties. Then there is that urge which seems to be the very essence of marriage—the urge to identify oneself with the marriage partner. This urge alone makes marriage the most difficult of all human relationships. Leon Blum ignores all this. He thinks that marriage is bound to be a success if both partners, once they had their fling, are willing to settle down to a peaceful married life. As he may have learned by now, things are not quite so simple . . .

"Marriage" was no best seller when it came out in 1907. Only now when everybody is anxious to hear something of the French premier's early lovelife do people buy the book, hoping all the time that it is very, very naughty. This is regrettable. For 30 years ago "Marriage" had a certain newness. Advocating that women had their fling as well as men, Leon Blum came out for women's equality. He discussed passion, twin beds, the cruelty of frankness, etc., etc., with the utmost candor. Since then all these things have been said too often to be still startling.

Leon Blum writes about marriage not as a revolutionary—not even as a Socialist. He writes about marriage as a Frenchman. As a Frenchman, he believes in marriage as an institution invented to give sincerity to an important field of human relationships. Like all Frenchmen, Leon Blum is very much for security. Adolf Hitler's "Mein Kampf" is more important than Leon Blum's "Marriage." But "Marriage" is ever so much more humane. It is a grand feeling that somewhere in the world there is a premier, who knows that love is an art, and that everybody should be as good at it as he possibly can. Heil Leon Blum!

"MARRIAGE," by Leon Blum. (Lippincott, $2.50).

"HUNGRY WATERS," by Lowell Thomas. (Winston, Philadelphia, $1.50.)

In 321 pages compact of statistics, powerful pictures, maps, charts, and meaningful words, Lowell Thomas can only skim over the story of the 1937 flood and its many tragic forerunners. "Hungry Waters" attempts the account, but a mass of detail overwhelms, as the noted commentator admits at the outset. But enough has been relearned in this recent deluge to establish definitely the best methods of flood control. Thomas views the situation as usual with a first-rate observer—closely, completely, writing as he reads and talks: with a facile, forceful flow of words set in a tempo that makes the account vivid and almost current.

Eight States were seriously affected; more than half a thousand lives lost, property damage cost uncounted millions; associations of home and environment shattered; in many places, scenic beauty effaced forever, despite rapid rehabilitation. Oddly enough, man's scientific might created and cured the greater havoc. Miles of earthwork levees were crushed; dams, bridges, basins, were obliterated.

Some important aspects of the floods were those that hit agriculture, and the reparation there is far from complete; hardly begun, indeed. So much so that economists and agronomists warn of the rich top-soils washed away into rivers, poor crops, etc., "if we keep on as we are now going, in another century we shall be unable to maintain our agriculture." To those who realize how solidly civilization sets on agriculture for its material needs, the prevailing condition contains high potency.

Viewing the national situation, Thomas points out that ten large dams are vitally necessary to integrate a wide net-work of protection and prevention. Six of these—"unless politics and retrenchment interfere" will be complete by the end of 1940. The others are so far unapproved, but urgent. Other preventative projects must accompany them: reforestation, soil conservation—that includes contour-strip planning, where needed—but foremost—dams. Dams that can, in certain sections of the land—give back stored-up waters in time of drought.

Tenderfoot!

"IF YOU'RE GOING TO LIVE IN THE COUNTRY," by Thomas H. Ormsbee and Richmond Huntley. (Thomas Y. Crowell.)

If you are going to succumb to the call of the countryside and move out beyond the suburban fringe, here's a book that will save you grief and vexation. The authors are well aware of the fascination of country life to the city dweller. They themselves yielded to temptation and moved out in the country. And this book, based upon their experiences, is packed full of sound advice on what to look for, what to avoid, and how to handle the unexpected situation that will arise to plague the city tenderfoot.

But this is more than just a handy man's manual. It tells how to avoid those troubles, by choosing your location properly, by the right kind of construction and by sensible planning and anticipation. Chimneys never smoke if built properly. Water pipes don't freeze if properly protected when installed. Water supply need never concern you after moving in, if you have given it the proper attention beforehand. And so on. The authors go into every phase of country living, from why you need an architect to the problem—and it is one!—of Sunday afternoon visitors.

Advertising

"A PREFACE TO ADVERTISING," by Mark O'Dea. (Whittlesey House, $2.)

The dramatization of business and industry has lately become a healthy vogue, the public going behind the scenes to view intimately many an industry hitherto cloaked in mystery. Such frank works have done much to renew faith in the business world at a time when it has been hounded by a pack of professional debunkers. Strangely enough, however, one of the most fascinting businesses of all has remained enshrouded. But now comes "A Preface to Advertising" to lift the curtain and dispassionately reveal the interesting technique of this unique form of publicity.

"A Preface to Advertising" plunges you into the thick of the advertising game—takes you on a trip through the wonderland of advertising! No time wasting with vague theory here. Instead, you read about advertising as it is practiced on the front, gain valuable practical facts about salesmanship-in-print.

While many books have been written about advertising, some have been lengthy tomes, others have been greatly specialized. But none, until "Preface to Advertising" have gone so deeply into the heart of the advertising business without becoming involved in its less interesting technicalities.

In 52 brief, concise, lucid chapters, Mark O'Dea leads you behind the scenes, shows you how advertising's greatest ideas have been developed and executed, gives you inside facts on their success or failures, draws pointed conclusions as to their value. People and products parade through the book. For instance, in chapters 3 and 12 O'Dea shows you how Henry Ford and Walter Chrysler differ in their approaches to the public.

O'Dea dramatizes advertising, but never becomes sensational. Pride of profession, on the other hand, does not prevent him from ridiculing here or castigating there. His is a sure pen. For Mark O'Dea knows the advertising business. As a manager of a large New York agency for years, and then as head of his own firm, he has had experience granted to few. Literally hundreds of great accounts have been under his supervision. For years a brilliant copywriter and essayist, O'Dea brings an original, refreshing style to these chapters. He has said much well, and briefly, for he gives you a "boil down" of the advertising business in 20,000 words.

GEORGE H. SHELDON.

Fiction

"GENTLEMAN OVERBOARD," by Herbert Clyde Lewis. (Viking Press, $1.50.)

From the moment Henry Payton Standish falls headlong into the Pacific the reader identifies himself with and shares the emotions of this estimable product of a well-ordered and polite society. The complete strangeness of the adventures of this "Gentleman Overboard" does not prevent the reader from recognizing the reasonable, nay, almost inevitable development of Mr. Standish's reactions to his plight.

"Gentleman Overboard," by Herbert Clyde Lewis, is an exception to the usual first novel in that it is not at all autobiographical. Mr. Lewis has captured the illusive quality of the story teller, and so surely and effortlessly does this work of fiction proceed that it marks its author as one capable of sustained imaginative writing. He has thought both long and hard, reflecting upon every development of his story, and has then presented a well-knit, closely woven fabric, one that tells its story in 152 pages rather more than a thousand-odd.

CHARLES FORD O'NEALL

Potatoes O'Brien

By Theodore Hall

IT seems to be a law of the Medes and Persians that Edward J. O'Brien no sooner lays his annual anthology of short stories on the counter but reviewers do what they can to knock it into a cocked hat. A sheaf of press clippings on his latest, "Best Short Stories: 1937," would show you how they go about it. A touch or two of great appreciation (for stories Mr. O'Brien rather overlooked), a full quart of faint praise, and then a long ride on some hobby-horse of the reviewer that is intended to leave Mr. O'Brien looking on wistfully and admiringly. That's the ticket.

To be sure, Mr. O'Brien was collecting these anthologies before most reviewers had come to the eighth grade and "Silas Marner." He was already reading 20 short stories a day, every day in the year, and evaluing them, when the practice of criticism was for us something as remote and mysterious and impressive as shaving or rouge. But he must know, and be not displeased, that "Best Short Stories" has found this use as a teething-ring.

The greatest reverence is due the young, and yet even they should realize that when Mr. O'Brien entered upon his perennial project it was firm in the national mind that no American short story could improve upon "The Gold Bug" or "The Luck of Roaring Camp," unless it was the possible exception of "Pigs Is Pigs." We were about as adventurous in exploring the form and content of the short story as a mud turtle in the Grand Canyon. If Mr. O'Brien's phrases, "essentially human qualities . . . criticism of life . . . organic substance," now ring a bit familiarly on our ears, it must not be forgot how barren and stereotyped the short-story scene would have been without him. No word about Mr. O'Brien that ignores this, is worth its breath.

But then, there is the law of the Medes and Persians.

• • • •

THE critic's chief worry, indulged with all the concern of a majority stockholder, is over Mr. O'Brien's seeming predilection for small potatoes. In the present volume, of course, there is a great deal that one would want to have permanently at hand. William March's "Maybe the Sun Will Shine" is exactly and fully what Mr. O'Brien says, an "admirably tender and reticent story told with quiet irony" of a young man, accidentally blinded, who thinks he is going to be cured. S. S. Field's "Goodbye to Cap'm John," a picture of a rare old gentleman seen through a small boy's eyes, is even better than Mr. O'Brien's remarks might indicate. Morley Callaghan and Martha Foley, as always, are excellent. So is a newcomer, Edita Morris. Jesse Stuart is here for those who like him. And there is more than the usual obeisance made to Ernest Hemingway for "The Snows of Kilimanjaro," though it might be mentioned that the first page of the tale is impossible to understand short of four rereadings. In anyone short of Olympus, that might be thought a flaw.

But my hat! A full third of the book wouldn't be used for seedlings up in Aroostook County.

FIRST, there are the "novellas." Mr. O'Brien pleads that we take off the quotation marks from this word, and adopt it as the term for the long short story, the long tale a la "Ethan Frome" and "The Turn of the Screw." Well and good. But over the three examples he reprints, though I. V. Morris' "Marching Orders" may claim some exemptions, it is high time that someone stood up in meeting and said, "Flubdub!"

Here are two novellas, at least, constructed by the quite unstartling device of expending a sentence-worth of development into a whole paragraph of lush and purple prose. Ellis St. Joseph's "A Passenger to Bali," which tells of a strange and powerful Dutchman who boards a South Seas tramp steamer and can't be got rid of, is at once the better of the two for its mature and thoughtful passages, and the worse for its frequent silliness. There is, for example, a long and violent scene in which the Dutchman saves the ship in a storm by subduing the wildly spinning wheel on the bridge. Mr. O'Brien admits that he is "not satisfied that the wheel of a steamer is bound up as directly with the rudder as the author implies." Which is very polite of Mr. O'Brien.

But the matter is worth a word more than that, since to many readers, though the St. Joseph biographical note at the back indicates considerable Pacific travel, it will appear that the author has been reading too many pulp paper tales of sailing ships and has gone heavily romantic.

Now this is not quibbling over detail. It is part and parcel of the persuasion to credibility upon which any story is based. A yard-wide crack here is but a token of the myriad little cracks which run through the picture of a steamship captain with the hardihood of a high-school sorority girl, of a Dutchman whose eye revives the legend of the snake and the bird. The whole thing is just too thick, and if Mr. O'Brien really doesn't mind artificial scenes and circumstances so long as they set off a character, he might look up the much more edifying Glencannon stories in the Saturday Evening Post.

LOVELL THOMPSON'S "The Iron City" is brought in with a fine waving of the flags of Conrad and musical style. Let us quote. "After the vessel had gently forced its keel into the smooth sand, he was one of the first over the gangplank toward shore, and one of the many to be killed on that gangplank—his superhuman appetites quenched by human death . . . Shank saw, and the bile of his belly was sour in his throat." That sort of going, in all conscience, is no nearer Conrad than a freshman English composition class. It is one of the great glories of the pulp magazines that even they do not permit such blanc mange. And here, in this tale of two men on an Atlantic crossing, one of whom exhibits a snapshot of a handsome woman and, of course, gets murdered when possessiveness rears its ugly head, we are treated to an array in every hue from purple to magenta. This is really pretty dreadful.

Mr. Morris' "Marching Orders" is, happily, crisply written and filled with the texture of constant interest—the theme the preparation for suicide which all satiety with life implies. One question only. Why, in a tale so rounded and universal, must the chief actor be so oddly cast as a Greek tailor in Paris?

And E. H. Heth's "Homecoming" is old-hat potato salad, and Manuel Komroff's "The Girl With the Flaxen Hair" gets 12 per cent off by the gross, and Albert Halper's "The Poet" has a theme we all tried and found delicious at 17.

But Mr. O'Brien doesn't write these stories; he only selects them. He yearns, he nearly always has a better eye. Perhaps the year didn't have enough big potatoes to go round.

Elizabeth

"THE PRINCESS ELIZABETH: Probable Future Ruler of the Greatest Empire in the World," by Capt. Eric Acland. (The John C. Winston Co., $1.)

This is a charming story of a modern fairy tale princess who seems to have everything. She is described as flitting from one fabulous environment to another, surrounded by adoring, but firm, relatives and friends, but in spite of it all remaining just a sweet, wholesome little girl

Capt. Acland says the British people look forward with pleasure to being ruled by another and perhaps a greater Elizabeth. Certainly this little princess enjoys far more advantages than did Good Queen Bess, whose education was catch as catch can.

THE SUPREME COURT CRISIS
By Merlo J. Pusey
(With Foreword by U. S. SENATOR EDWARD R. BURKE)

President Roosevelt's attempt to enlarge the Supreme Court is one of the exciting events of our time. In this book the story of that venture is reviewed, and the policy behind it critically analyzed.

A number of Senators leading the fight against the President have endorsed this book. This fact, with Senator Burke's ringing foreword, makes it substantially a semi-official statement of their case.

Earhart Search Shifted South To Island Area

The Navy mine-sweeper Swan and the British freighter Moorby hunted in the vicinity of the Itasca.

The Itasca was instructed to investigate the report of an Oakland, Calif., radio amateur at 6:35 a. m. (Eastern standard time) that he heard the Earhart plane calling the Itasca. Coast Guardsmen held little hope that the message heard was really from the plane, since it gave as location an area already thoroughly searched.

The cutter also was asked to investigate a report picked up by a Pacific Coast station saying it heard a woman's voice making four distinct calls referring to "KHAQQ." Miss Earhart's call letters, and then a garbled dot-and-dash message indicating the sender was on a sand formation or a bank 225 miles from Howland.

Coast Guard stations continued to pick up unidentified "carrier signals" until about 9:30 a. m. (Eastern standard time) today, but were unable to read them and said there was no assurance they were from the Earhart plane.

The Itasca reported at 12:54 p. m. (Eastern standard time) it had no information about the missing fliers.

Progress of the United States aircraft carrier Lexington, bearing 57 planes and 1,299 men toward the hunt, indicated she would not be able to put her flying forces into action before the week-end.

She reported she would reach Lahaina Roads, near Honolulu, and refuel Friday. Three destroyers with the Lexington expected to arrive at Pearl Harbor Thursday.

The addition of the two Japanese ships to the searching forces brought the number of men engaged in the hunt to more than 4,000.

Searchers who accepted the theory the lost plane reached an island said it might be worth while to continue the hunt two weeks or more.

Hopes were raised but quickly dashed early today when the Itasca sighted lights it at first believed were flares, but which officers later concluded were meteors or heat lightning.

"Sighted flares, proceeding toward them," the cutter radioed at 3:46 a. m. (Eastern standard time).

"We can see your flares; are coming toward you," it messaged in an attempt to contact the missing plane.

But after a tense wait, listeners heard the Itasca report:

It would have been impossible for the Itasca and Howland Island, more than 280 miles apart, to have seen the same flares.

Mexico May Take Over 2 Railroads

Mexico City, July 6 (AP).—A spokesman for the Railway Workers Union said late today the government was considering expropriation and nationalization of two important foreign-controlled railways, Southern Pacific of Mexico and the Mexican Railway.

The union said the move would be in line with the government's plan to bring all Mexico's rail system under central official management.

By the Associated Press.

Amelia Earhart's disappearance resulted yesterday in an official suggestion that amateur radio stations be linked into a giant network for use in future emergencies.

J. B. Beadle, head of the amateur section of the Federal Communications Commission, said a Nation-wide chain, making possible communication with every spot on the globe, probably could be set up by a national amateur organization.

The country's 47,500 amateurs now have a national organization—the American Radio Relay League.

Beadle said an amateur chain could co-ordinate listening facilities quickly, assigning various groups of stations to cover certain frequencies. The listening could be arranged in shifts, he added, so a 24-hour watch could be maintained.

He pointed out it would be impossible to check fragmentary messages received by one amateur with those received by another, reducing the possibility of error.

Literally thousands of amateurs, hunched over receiving sets hours at a time, have been listening for some signal from the Earhart plane, Beadle said.

Amateurs on the West Coast, he asserted, may have a better chance of hearing Miss Earhart's radio than ships nearer her position, because radio waves often "skip" considerable distances from the point of transmission.

Beadle expressed the view that amateur activities in the Earhart search are causing no confusion, because the amateur stations do not transmit on frequencies assigned to the aviatrix.

The House passed yesterday a Senate bill authorizing payment of $5,000 to James H. Smith, of Washington, for injuries he claims to have received from X-ray burns while employed at the United States Veterans' Hospital at Dwight, Ill., and the Veterans' Bureau office at Lexington, Ky.

The bill goes back to the Senate with a minor House amendment.

'Foreign Spirits' Talk to Be Heard By Ethnologists

Lily Dale, N. Y., July 6 (AP).—A recording in foreign tongues of "spirit messages," which spiritualists here say are received by a British medium, will be sent to the Bureau of Ethnology in Washington, D. C., for examination.

R. G. Pressing, editor of the Dale News, weekly newspaper in this spiritualist summer camp, said today a 30-minute record would be made for the bureau tomorrow to prove the "messages" are delivered in authentic foreign languages.

"The medium, Horace S. Hambling, of London, speaks no Indian, Chinese or Italian except a phrase or two," Pressing said.

"The record, however, will begin with ten minutes of conversation, in Indian, from the Indian spirit, Moon Trail," he continued. "This will be followed by ten minutes of Chinese from the spirit of Ruan Fu, and ten minutes in Italian from the spirit 'Tony.'"

Teigen Advocates Public Ownership

By the Associated Press.

Representative Teigan (Farmer-Labor), Minnesota, said in a radio broadcast last night that workers can better their conditions only through gaining possession of the machinery of production and distribution.

"This means that through the political control of the State and through public and co-operative ownership of banks, railroads, public utilities and national resources can the common people be made safe from the plundering of those who today exploit them."

He said this could best be accomplished through a national Farmer-Labor or Progressive Party controlled by farmers.

65 Child Tubercular Cases Rest, Enjoy Good Medical Care, May Be Fully Cured by Summer Outing at Blue Plains Camp

Post Staff Photos.

Sixty-five children were taken yesterday to the Bald Eagle Camp at Blue Plains, where, until September, everything possible will be done to make them safe from tuberculosis. Examination is the fist order of things for new arrivals. Dr. George Lemeskewsky (left) looks over a throat. Sunshine and fresh air are essential to recovery. There are plenty of both in the camp dormitory (center). Cod liver oil doesn't make a tasty mouthful, but a bottle of cool milk is something else, so the young lady (right) smiles.

By Jean Brownell.

"I'll be out again the first visiting day. Be good, son, won't you?"

"Yes, Mom, I will. Go on home now."

He kissed her self-consciously and ran off—to start his first day at the Bald Eagle Hill camp for tubercular children.

Like the 64 other children enrolled in the camp, 10-year-old Johnny is a victim of childhood tuberculosis, not of the active pulmonary stage of the disease. The chances are that all he has is a slight bronchial infection.

But in his home is a case of advanced pulmonary tuberculosis which he probably will contract if steps are not taken to break the contact. This circumstance, coupled with crowded living conditions, poor-quality food and his susceptibility to the disease, make home the wrong place for Johnny.

So for 8 or 9 weeks he will live in the sun and fresh air of Blue Plains, where the camp is located. He will sleep 11 hours a night in a dormitory building whose walls consist chiefly of wire screening; take a 2-hour rest twice daily, eat three substantial meals a day and play only the less violent types of games.

He has a very good chance of being completely cured when he returns home in September.

In the meantime, the District Tuberculosis Association will take steps to have the pulmonary patient taken from his home to Gallinger or to the Tuberculosis Hospital if there is a bed for him in either place. Johnny and tuberculosis will then part company forever.

The tragedy of Bald Eagle Hill is that all other District children in the same predicament as Johnny will not have his chance. Of 300 applicants, 120 children with childhood tuberculosis were chosen to go to the camp.

As preparations progressed it became evident that although 120 could be housed comfortably, the available funds, raised from the sale of Christmas seals, would pay the food and medical costs for only half that number. An additional five children are being sent by the District Parent-Teacher Association, the colored Elks, the Federated Civic Association and the East Central Civic Association.

Even yesterday, which was set as the opening day, camp officials were not certain the young campers could come out from the city for some time. Drainage facilities were not complete, there was no electric wiring and the kitchen fixtures were not connected.

But a small army of workmen arrived on the scene the same morning and bustled around with such effect that lunch could be served the early arrivals yesterday noon.

The children, 2½ to 12 years old, arrived in private cars provided by the Wallace Motor Co. Some were accompanied by their mothers, who were encouraged not to stay any longer than necessary.

The parents out of the way, two nurses and five counselors took things in hand. The youngsters were escorted to one of the four dormitories, depending on whether they were boys or girls, white or colored.

After a short rest period the campers were subjected to an examination in the medical building by Dr. George P. Lemeshewsky, camp physician, and Miss Sara Shreiner, the nurse in charge. As the Health Department clinic already had examined the children's chests, the doctor and nurse at the camp laid stress on ear, throat and especially scalp conditions.

Today the regular schedule of rest periods, supervised play and cod liver oil doses will go into effect. Sunday evening the first weekly picnic will be held, followed by a candlelight hour at which the campers will discuss the problems of the week with the superintendent, Mrs. Margaret Craig Marsh and her staff of counselors.

Of the 65 children, 44 are white and 21 colored. The population is about evenly divided between boys and girls.

Each camper costs the District Tuberculosis Association $10 a week. At that rate Mrs. Ernest B. Grant, managing director of the association, estimates "the money burned up in fireworks Monday would pay for the cure of every tuberculosis case in the District."

Explaining the purpose of the camp, Mrs. Grant said:

"In the limited time the camp is in operation, we don't expect to arrest every case of tuberculosis, but a great many will be cured. Every child in the camp will receive a physical boost that will help him through the stress and strain of school the following winter.

"It will also make him less susceptible not only to the further stages of tuberculosis but also to any other disease that attacks a child when his physical energy is at a low ebb."

Looking at the cheerful, normal bunch of children, it is hard to believe they are members of "the other half." Miss Shreiner, the camp nurse, is familiar with many of them through her experiences as a field worker for the Tuberculosis Association's rehabilitation service, and can tell tales of their background which make one wonder how they are alive at all.

She points out the family, for instance. The family is represented at Bald Eagle Hill by six children, ages ranging from 10 to 3. That leaves four children who are spending the summer at home.

The family has been receiving aid from the association for ten years. Its present monthly income is $55, derived from relief.

The father has pulmonary tuberculosis. The six children at camp all have childhood tuberculosis—severe cases of it, for the most part. Living conditions at home are crowded. Had the association not stepped in and taken the six little ones to camp, they might have contracted the father's pulmonary infection and spread it through the entire family.

Such potential tragedies are forgotten in the sun of Blue Plains. There all was gayety yesterday afternoon. A little colored boy romped by, crooning:

"I know what to tell my friends, dear,
But what shall I tell my heart?"

Little girls giggled and made friends.

One lad sat silently on the porch of the main building, from which the Potomac can be seen in the distance.

"Homesick?" someone asked.

Building Bill Ruled Legal, Not Referable

10-Page Opinion Backs Sale of $1,000,000 Bond Issue.

The City of Annapolis won its long court fight to become more than the capital of Maryland in geography books when the board of public works was victorious in its battle for the erection of a million dollar State office building without referendum on a bond issue.

The way appeared clear today for the board to arrange details of the project which will ultimately bring thousands of State employes to the capital from Baltimore where they are now housed in privately owned structures. The State has been paying real estate interests $150,000 a year in rentals.

Mayor Lewis N. Phipps, a leader in the campaign to clear State offices from big Baltimore was jubilant yesterday after one court of appeals ruling, the first on the legality of the Legislature creating a debt with intereest due the same year without budgeting the interest charges.

The referendum thesis of the plaintiff, Harvey C. Bickel, Baltimore taxpayer, was voided on the grounds that the funds are for the maintenance of State government and therefore not subject to vote. Chief Justice Carroll T. Bond, in reading the majority decision, also made the following points on the constitutionality of the issue, according to the Associated Press:

That the act does not require the issue and sale of all the $1,000,000 in bonds.

That the Legislature did not order $1,000,000 expanded regardless of the use for it.

That the act gives authority to acquire a site, and to take all other necessary steps to erect the building.

That the act meets the constitutional provision that no debt shall be created by the Legislature unless funds are provided to meet interest payments when due, and to discharge the principal in 15 years.

That the act meets all constitutional requirements.

The opinion written by Judge Bond was concurred in by the entire bench, consisting of Judges Hammond Urner, T. Scott Offutt, F. Neal Parke, D. Lindley Sloan, W. Mason Shehan and Benjamin A. Johnson.

The 10-page opinion took up each question raised by Willis R. Jones, attorney for Bickel, who instituted taxpayer proceedings by asking Judge Edwin Dickerson, of the Baltimore Circuit Court, for an injunction restraining the Board of Public Works from selling the bonds.

Judge Dickerson held the bill to be constitutional, but subject to referendum. Jones appealed from the constitutionality finding. He had previously, with Sydney R. Traub, Baltimore City councilman, filed a petition bearing more than 10,000 names with the Secretary of State to force the measure to the decision of the State voters in the November, 1938, election.

Despite the petition, which met legal requirements to force the referendum, the Board of Public Works ordered $100,000 of the bonds sold on October 6. Judge Dickerson enjoined this action of the board, which appealed. David S. Jenkins, local publisher, joined in this appeal.

The opinion took up the arguments of opponents of the bill that the title was defective and unconstitutional in that it committed the State to no definite expenditure—the title specifying that a sum not exceeding $1,000,000 should be appropriated.

THE FEDERAL DIARY

Rep. U. S. Patent Office.

By Scott Hart.

C. I. O. Loses Teeth

If—as reported—the President has turned a serious eye on the organization of Government personnel by the C. I. O. and is determined that the Lewis organization shall not exercise a too militant, too aggressive policy in its new field—then the United Federal Workers of America have something to sit up and notice.

It certainly puts no teeth in the infant's mouth—if anything it seems fairly to deprive the U. F. W. A. of its walking shoes. The chief attraction the U. F. W. A. has held out is the factor of the C. I. O.'s aggressiveness—the promise of action never stymied. Its strength has been the suddenness, the vigor of its moves. And beyond dispute this was the appeal that caught the imagination of many emergency workers who form the U. F. W. A. nucleus.

They reasoned that here was an agency that might go to bat in the campaigns for continuation of jobs—the chief and understandable interest of most of them. But some emergency workers tell this column that they might, with reason, ponder on how far they should go in a direction that seems aggravating to the Administration.

* * * *

On Good Behavior

Certainly, the reported attitude of of the Administration would not strengthen the U. F. W. A. in the eyes of the thousands of conservative members of the older employe organizations, which the U. F. W. A. has been looking at with comehither eyes. Nor would it become more attractive to the other thousands of employes who never have joined anything—the unorganized workers who are sought by all.

The President, as everyone knows, is the one Chief Executive who has given unions a push. The right of Federal workers to join a union is recognized. But in the reported attitude, it seems that one particular union has been singled out—and, if any of the ntport can be credited—has been placed on good behavior. It would be definitely in the situation of asking for recruits, associates, while under surveillance.

The U. F. W. A. has said it would be no partner to strikes, picketing or other outward expression that might be regarded as unseemly in public servants. Evidently this promise has been taken with a grain of salt.

And patiently, the U. F. W. A. is reduced to the status of just another group in the field to organize Government employes. For without the C. I. O.'s fireworks, its genius for sudden moves, its militancy, the U. F. W. A. has no particular show window to attract the trade, observers point out. It has no more show window than the A. F. G. E., the U. C. S. E., the N. F. F. E. or any other organization which presents itself as the employe's friend.

* * * *

Tone of Optimism

A tone of optimism overhung the press conference called by Jacob Baker yesterday morning. It was the first conference he has held. He started off by saying he had nothing particularly hot to offer, but there ensued some very definite insights into the operations of the organization. Among these were:

The fact that U. F. W. A. organizers will go soon into the South—to Knoxville, Tenn., to Chicago, to Minneapolis, to Detroit, to the West Coast. In these fields they will offer the new C. I. O. group to any receptive Government workers.

The C. I. O. has not handed its new Government personnel group any such sums as $65,000 or $25,000, as have been reported on "unimpeachable authority." The truth is, Baker stated, no particular sum has ever been discussed. To date, the national organization has given the U. F. W. A. exactly $5,000. That clears up one point of speculation, at least.

Baker said there was absolutely no foundation to reports the U. F. W. A. is further to discuss its announced policy against strikes and picketing by Government personnel. A definite stand against strikes and picketing was taken when the organization was formed. He left the definite impression there is nothing more to be said or done on that subject.

There are tentative plans for public meetings—to assume the proportion of mass meetings—during the summer.

3 Hagerstown Children Injured by Fireworks

Hagerstown, July 6.—Fourth of July accidents due to fireworks sent one girl to the hospital and two others needed medical attention. Virginia Nuse was burned about the face when she was struck by a torpedo, while an explosion of a torpedo under their feet injured Robert Maison, 15, and Frances [illegible], 9.

Police to Confer On Jurisdiction In Taxi Slaying

To Decide if C. L. Miller Was Killed in D. C. or at Greenbelt.

Sergt. Ralph Brown, of the Prince Georges County police, said yesterday he would confer today with Washington police in an effort to clarify the question of jurisdiction in the death of Charles L. Miller, Washington cab driver, whose skeleton was found last week in a woods near Greenbelt, Md.

Miller, who disappeared from his home, 3008 Twentieth street northeast, last July 28, was robbed and murdered, police believe. Acting on information he had taken a passenger to the Sisters College of Catholic University the night he disappeared, police, Boy Scouts and a group of 25 cab drivers searched the woods near the university shortly after Miller was reported missing.

The skeleton was not discovered until 11 months afterward, however, by workmen who ran across it accidentally while clearing a site for a building.

The question to be decided is whether Miller was slain in the District and his body carried to the woods or whether the murder was committed there.

Plane Contract Let For $4,113,550

Secretary of War Woodring yesterday announced a contract totaling $4,113,550 has been awarded to the Curtiss Wright Corporation of Buffalo, N. Y., for the construction of single-seat pursuit planes for the Army. The award was made after competitive tests and is the largest contract let for several years, War Department officials said.

The new planes are low-wing all-metal cabin ships each powered by a Pratt Whitney two-row, radial, air-cooled engine. Retractable landing gear and tail wheel will add materially to the speed of the planes, it was said.

Veterans' Association Installs New Officers

Those installed were William B. Souleret, commander; Alfred B. Bishop, senior vice commander; Charles C. Chille, junior vice commander; B. C. Hayner, chaplain; Robert B. Walker, quartermaster, and F. C. Stretlow, adjutant.

Congress Halted Big 1803 Debate To Attend Races

Grover C. Ayers, 1800 K street northwest, whose hobby is collecting material on the early history of the District, last night reported finding what looks like a pretty good precedent for the exodus of legislators from Capitol Hill for the All-Star ball game today.

He found published in an 1887 copy of Harper's Magazine a series of letters from Senator Samuel Latham Mitchell, a New York physician, written to his wife in 1803.

The Senate was then in the throes of the Louisiana Purchase debate, while at a track 4 miles from the Hill, a horse race meeting was opening.

Several members of the Senate suggested adjournment to permit attendance at the races, but no action was taken until other members discovered, the Senator's letter relates, that the ceiling in the Senate chamber had fallen a few days earlier and that now would be as good a time as any to call in the "mason" for repairs.

As for the House, it simply "met and adjourned."

Last Rites Today For Major Curdts

Funeral services for Maj. Frederick Louis Curdts, 63, who died at his home, Curdts Villa, in Nolan County, Va., Monday, will be held at Arlington Cemetery with military honors this afternoon.

The retired Army officer had been seriously ill for more than two months.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Hattie Debnam Curdts; one sister, Mrs. E. L. Norwood, of Norfolk; two brothers, Capt. E. M. Curdts, of Norfolk, and George T. Curdts, of Jackson, Tenn., and a number of nieces and nephews.

Maj. Curdts saw active service in both the Spanish-American and World Wars. During the World War he served as commander of the First Battalion, 116th Infantry, Twenty-ninth Division, in France. He was also commanding officer of Camp Canet, replacement camp at Marseille.

He was born in Norfolk and received his early education in the public schools there and at Norfolk Academy. He enlisted with the National Guard and rose to the rank of major. He saw action in the Spanish-American War and with the outbreak of the World War transferred to the United States Army. Following the war he retired from military service, receiving an honorable discharge at Camp Dix, N. J., January 23, 1919, and returned to Norfolk.

He acquired the country home at which he died and moved there on June 1, 1927. Since then he has been active in community projects and organized the Afton Garden Club several years ago.

Youth Is Held As Solicitor In Permit Case

Woman Accuses Him of Asking Fee to Expedite Driver's License.

A business of soliciting fees to eliminate delay in issuance of drivers' permits was uncovered by police yesterday with the arrest of a youth in the Traffic Bureau, Pennsylvania avenue and John Marshall place, on complaint of a woman applicant.

Harlan Arthur Shutts, 22, of 432 H street northwest, was charged with soliciting in violation of traffic regulations to assist a party obtain a driving permit. He was arrested at the bureau by Detective William Fawcett, of the First Precinct.

Fawcet was detailed to the building after Mrs. J. H. Roff, 1002 K street northwest, complained she was approached by a man who offered his services "to get your permit quick" for a fee of $2.

Mrs. Roff said she applied for a driving license Saturday, but was turned away until yesterday due to the large crowd that was waiting. She complained she had arranged to meet the man yesterday and that he said he would get her license for her without delay.

At the First Precinct where Shutts was held in lieu of $25 bail, he admitted, Fawcett said, that he had solicited.

Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer said complaints against soliciting in his department have been coming in for several weeks. He said there are other men who have not yet been apprehended.

8 Become Eagle Scouts At Campfire Program

Investiture of eight youths from various parts of the country as Eagle Scouts was one of the features of last night's campfire program in the Jamboree's international section along Constitution avenue, between Sixteenth and Seventeenth streets.

The varied program included story-telling by Exequiel Villacorta, of the Philippines, and Harold Stein, of Hawaii; choral singing by the Mexican and Rumanian delegations; a vocal solo by Anthony Maillis, of the Bahamas; an Indian dance by John Heimans, and a concert by the Santa Barbara, Calif., Scout Band.

Garage Operator Is Shot in Legs In Family Dispute

Raymond Candano, 50, operator of Sheridan's Garage, 2516 Q street northwest, was wounded in both thighs last night when a revolver went off during what police said was a quarrel with his wife, Dr. Della Ledendecker Candano, 40, an osteopath, in the garage office.

Dr. Candano who is being held for investigation at the Women's Bureau, told officers, they said, her husband grabbed a pistol from a desk drawer and threatened to shoot her.

She slapped the weapon from his hand, according to her story to the police, and the gun was discharged.

Candano was taken to Emergency Hospital. His condition was not believed to be serious.

Dr. Candano, portions of her clothing torn off, was taken to the Seventh Precinct station for questioning before removal to the Women's Bureau. No charge had been placed against her last night.

Cosmopolitan Club To Hear Dr. Hunt

In keeping with the Boy Scout Jamboree, the Cosmopolitan Club has obtained Dr. H. W. Hunt, director of research, Boy Scouts of America, as speaker for tomorrow's luncheon at the Carlton Hotel. Dr. Hunt will be introduced by William Edelblut, chairman of the forum committee.

Dr. Hunt is an author and lecturer. His "Hand Book for Scouting" and "Boy Scout Hand Book" are the textbooks of Scouts. He is also the author of cub hand books and other literature on scouting.

The speaker served as the chief of the educational division of the Foreign Press Bureau of the Committee on Public Information during the World War.

Wide Variety of Charges, 10,000 Confiscations Reported to Brown.

Arrests for practically every offense on the statute books were listed on the report of the fiscal year's activities submitted by Maj. Brown yesterday by the vice squad.

Under the direction of Capt. George M. Little the squad arrested 1,055 persons and confiscated more than 10,000 pieces of property including 4,144 quarts of liquor, 649 bottles of beer, 140 gallons of mash, 2 smoke screens, 1 roulette wheel, 63 telephones and 21 automobiles.

Offense against Federal statutes numbered 366. They included 42 charges of conspiracy to violate gaming laws, 25 charges of white slavery, 99 lottery counts, 66 charges of setting up a gaming table and 38 violations of the liquor tax act.

Arrests for violations of the District code amounted to 495, including 95 drunks, 114 charges of keeping liquor for sale, 50 minor traffic violations and 118 counts of selling liquor without a liscense.

Teacher for 50 Years, Blind at Birth, Is Dead

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Martinsburg, W. Va., July 6.—Blind from birth but, in later life, saying she had no regrets and would not care to have her sight, Miss Nettie Lucas, 83, died at the home of a niece, Mrs. Charles L. Seibert, near here, Saturday, and was buried here yesterday.

When about 13 she entered the West Virginia School for the Deaf and Blind at Romney, where she was educated; and some few years later she became a member of the faculty of the school, first teaching music, and later transferred to the primary department. She taught for 50 years there until retiring three years ago to resume residence in this county.

Scouts' Founder Radios Regrets At Being Absent

Lord Baden-Powell, founder of the world Boy Scout movement, yesterday broadcast his regrets at not being able to attend America's first National Jamboree and urged his fellow Scouts to cultivate brotherhood among their foreign friends as well as among themselves.

The founder's voice was heard from London by short wave to New York and over a coast-to-coast N. B. C. network.

One reason that he hated to miss the encampment, the peer said, is his fondness for American ice cream. Lord Baden-Powell's last visit to the United States was in 1935.

In the interim, he reported, membership in the Scout movement has increased by 340,000, bringing the total enrollment to 2,812,060 in 51 countries.

"That is by far the biggest brotherhood of boys that the world has ever seen," he said, "but I want it to be a real live brotherhood, a brotherhood not merely in name but in spirit and friendship. And that is where you fellows at Washington come in."

The Marxes—Groucho, Chico and Harpo—Go 'Nuts' In Their Latest and Most Lunatic Feature Comedy

"A Day at the Races" Is the Funniest Film Play These Zanies Ever Have Brought to the Screen; Skelton Brings Seven-Act Vaudeville Bill; Actresses Who Sing and Singers Who Act; Notes of the Theater.

THOSE Mad Marxmen have gone and done it again—only more so! In "A Day at the Races," previewed yesterday afternoon in the private projection room at the Twentieth Century-Fox Film Exchange, they offer an overstuffed sample of comic lunacy, the like of which never has been seen on the screen before in a full-length feature. With the full roster of the present-day Freres Marx—Groucho, Chico and Harpo—they are three times as funny, naturally, as any one of them would be alone. From lifelong association they team together perfectly and never miss a trick in the artistically exalted realm of sheer idiocy.

BELL.

Like all camera farces, "A Day at the Races" is written in a series of distinct and distinctive sequences, each of which might be a tabloid comedy by itself. In this instance, however, they are bound loosely together by a slender thread of plot and all contribute to the general development of the cockeyed story of a horse doctor who is brought north from Florida to take charge of a privately owned sanitarium about to go on the rocks. The sweetheart of the youthful proprietress of the health resort owns a race horse that doesn't look too good on the flat, but turns out to be a steeplechaser of the first flight. That is how we get to the race course after many convulsing moments in the sanitarium where Dr. Hackenbush applies an odd technique to the cure of his human patients.

Each of the successive sequences is funnier and more furious than the one that has preceded it. Interrupting the high-pressure activities of the Maniacal Marxes—probably so they can catch their breaths—are musical numbers and a water carnival that add variety and charm to a piece primarily dedicated to the lunatic asylums. If you think that these must necessarily be tawdry, know then that the most lilting numbers are sung by Allan Jones, one of the best tenors in pictures. A graceful ballet number also is staged at the carnival, while the sheriff is chasing Groucho, Chico and Harpo all over the set and adjoining county.

There is a reason, of course, for the sure-fire quality of the Marxian comedy gags. Before beginning the filming of a feature, it is their custom to take their script on a tour of Western theaters in the form of a musical revue which they subject to the acid test of audience reaction. Everything that is found not to be as funny as it was expected to be is discarded and only the portions that roll the customers in the aisles are kept in.

This is a procedure that entails the expenditure of a considerable amount of time, effort and money, but the results are worth it. Whatever is lost—if anything is lost—on the preliminary road tour is more than made up by the box-office grosses of the finished picture.

Evidently realizing that they have a guaranteed hit, the producers have not slighted production values in this crazy subject. All of the facilities at the command of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer were utilized in making it "big" in its every aspect.

Tighten all the buttons and go see it when it opens at the Palace on Friday. You'll never have so much fun at Laurel or Bowie.

It is an odd thing how contradictory the motion picture business can be at times. Players signed for their voices are made into dramatic actresses and dramatic actresses, who lay no claims to vocalism, are made to sing. For instance, Carole Lombard, never heralded as a singing star, was called upon to be one in "Swing High, Swing Low," with Fred MacMurray, and now Jane Wyman, who was proselyted to the celluloids from radio, where she achieved quite a reputation and quantities of fan mail as a singer, is cast in pictures, but never allowed to warble a note. Her latest role is as an actress with Dick Powell in "The Singing Marine," opening on the Earle screen day after tomorrow. This is Miss Wyman's fourth or fifth film assignment and she has yet to sing a note for the sound tracks. Maybe sometime the Warner Brothers will remember that she used to be a singer.

When Red Skelton returns to the stage of Loew's Capitol Theater as master of ceremonies on Friday, it is announced that he will have a seven-act vaudeville bill behind him. This is an array of variety talent almost equivalent to what we used to see in the top vaudeville houses in the remote era of the two-a-day.

Edna Stilwell, his comely blonde partner, again will serve as foil for the Skelton goings-on. Dolly Dawn, well known to radio dialists; Raymond Baird, unique instrumentalist; the Five Maxellos, gymnasts; the Stanley Twins, Ruthie Barnes and Al Gordon's Racketeers all will be present when the curtains part on the first show Friday.

After yesterday afternoon's preview, I am tempted to amend my original draft of the "law" to include the removal of ladies' hats in private projection rooms. There was a young woman in front of me wearing a very elegant straw platter on the back of her head that did my neck no good whatever. I hesitated to request its removal because it was an invitational affair and I was not the host. One does not go around asking young ladies to unbonnet themselves—at private parties—or so I hear.

Theresa Helburn, ranking executive director of the Theater Guild, has been covering ground at the University of California and Leland Stanford University in her capacity as director of the Bureau of New Plays, discussing the future of dramatic writing in colleges with relation to the professional stage.

Robert Sibley, secretary of the California Alumni Association, and Hubert Heffner, professor of dramatic literature at Northwestern, now at Leland Stanford to direct "Twelfth Night" for the Summer Drama Festival, have been her interlocutors and guides—as if Miss Helburn needed any guide when it comes to matters pertaining to the living theater.

And what does Haviland, the magician, do but send me a living Belgian hare late at night with a note explaining that he had just removed it from a folded page of The Washington Post for the amazement of a troop of Boy Scouts he had been entertaining with a batch of his baffling tricks. He said "George" was a nice rabbit and he was—soft as velvet and scared to death. Could I find him a happy home? I wondered. Then Mr. Dean, an employe of The Post, who owns a large, closely fenced-in- back yard and has some small and gentle children, came along and the problem was solved. Mr. Dean took him home that same night and reports that he seems very happy in his new surroundings. I am just as well satisfied that Mr. Haviland doesn't take elephants out of hats and folded newspapers, or even hippopotami!

Aid-to-Fair-Weather Note.

Groucho Playfully Marx the Spot!

Or perhaps he is posing as a stool pigeon, as Harpo would in his mute pantomime. At any rate, this classic posturing seems to have nothing whatever to do with horse racing. "A Day at the Races," however, has a great deal to do with it, in a manner that is frantic, foolish and funny. This probably will be hailed as the most continuously hilarious of all the film comedies the Marx Brothers have brought to the screen. It opens at the Palace on Friday.

The Post's New Yorker

By LEONARD LYONS

New York, July 6.

THE REPORT now is that a group of Colorado officials came to Billy Rose and asked whether he'd be interested in producing an exposition which would help the tourist trade there. The deal was called off when the enthusiastic Mr. Rose brought out a map of Colorado, pointed to the Grand Canyon, and shouted: "Great! We'll make that the orchestra pit" . . . Although Ben Hecht has told interviewers that he has severed his partnership with Charlie MacArthur, the latter insists it isn't true—that as soon as they get a writing idea they'll work on it. In the meantime they'll be partners in a 550-acre development in Suffern, N. Y. . . . Amos 'n' Andy, for their new fall program, will net a mere $10,000 a week.

THE NEW SUMMER PHONE DIRECTORY carries a Minsky's Oriental ad already—although Moss as yet hasn't issued a license to the former burlesque operators . . . Tullio Carminati will appear in a fall musical Hassard Short will direct. The producer and backer will be Frank Crumit . . . Reginald Wright Kaufman, the editor, is writing a biography of the late Jesse L. Straus . . . On Rudy Vallee's next radio program will be featured a young singer—a protege of John McCormack. The youngster, who had been worried about advance publicity—is named Robert Irwin.

LEON GORDON, the artist, just returned from a tour of America, completing 11 portraits of notables, including one of Publisher Robert Scripps. All the portraits were accepted by the subjects, who expressed satisfaction. "That worries me," Gordon sighed. "It means something's wrong—in that I'm not painting beyond the common man!"

BERT GORDON is one of the comics appearing in R-K-O's "New Faces." In one scene, Gordon—the Mad Russian—speaks: "La krotzniya portina sincranto lafortista munatchi" . . . Bert is somewhat upset now, for the R-K-O script-girl assigned to that movie asked him to deliver a translation of those words, in accordance with the requirements of the Will Hays office. To the best of Gordon's knowledge there is no translation, because he concocted those words himself . . . The difficulty, however, lies in the fact that—accidentally—one of those words, in some language, might make sense—censorable sense.

ADRIAN MARTIN, of "The Women," for many years has harbored a dream of some day meeting Katharine Cornell. Saturday night she heard that Miss Cornell was visiting backstage. "I'll rush downstairs and hide behind a prop," Adrian gushed, "so maybe I'll catch a glimpse of her" . . . She rushed downstairs, raced around the corner of a prop where she ran right smack into and almost knocked over—Miss Katharine Cornell.

The card was a tricky one, with the letters printed half on one side of the paper and half on the other. To read the entire message the paper must be held up to the light—otherwise it appears to be a strange collection of unknown signs . . . The card was returned bearing the stamp "Censura"—censored!

Comedian Does Stint to Help Newspaper Pal

W. C. Fields Rattles Off Column Under Slight Difficulties.

By W. C. Fields.

Hollywood, July 6 (U.P.).—Come, my little amanuensis, take a letter. Pardon me, pardon me, I mean a column. A great column for my old friend and boon companion, er—er—come, come, my little baggage, look up the fellow's name. Don't just sit there. What do you mean, you haven't got his name? Must I bear the burden of this hectic household singlehanded?

Never mind, never mind, I'll get the man's name. A very pretty name it is, too. Wait a minute, now, it's on the tip of my tongue. I hear it rattling around in by brain clamoring for utterance. Man wears a mustache and writes for a newspaper. Nice guy, too. His father was an old Army man, poor fellow; he was cashiered out of the cavalry for cheating at horseshoes. The regiment was broken hearted. His favorite horse . . . What are you staring at me for? Pay attention to this dictation and take down my every word.

Dear so-and-so. Just a few lines to let you know that I am alive and well. Only yesterday I was down at Paramount beholding the wonders of motion picture making; watching them film a shipwreck for a sea picture on a studio tank stage, when an old man came up to me and inquired how I felt. "Fine, fine," I responded heartily. "I will soon return to the fold and make another picture." Well, the old man turned out to be a little crazy. He handed me some literature for a casket company and walked away.

I have thrown away my clutches—er, crutches. Science has done wonders for me. After a little overhauling this old chassis drives like a V-sixteen, and is now able once more to start or stop on a dime. Especially stop. And now, my charming Piltdown, read me the column to the point where we are at present and we will go on from there.

What? What do you mean, you can't read it? Oh, you were taking it down in shorthand? Oh, well, no wonder! 'Ods Bodkins, what a woman!

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDDLER

Hollywood, July 6.—Memories that bless and burn: When a school day friend, visiting Joan Crawford, displayed snapshots of her baby and Joan burst into tears. When Norman Kerry, lunching in the Montmartre, suddenly stripped off his shirt to show the tattooing on his chest. When Gloria Swanson, hearing that Pola Negri was afraid of cats, bought all the tabbies in the city pound and dumped them on Pola's porch.

ELISSA LANDI.

When James Cruze, then the highest paid director, held open house and filled a punch bowl with coins, inviting one and all who needed it to help themselves. When John Barrymore wore a beard-disguise to dodge a too persistent process server. When Elissa Landi threatened to break her contract with Fox rather than pose for "leg art." When a Los Angeles newspaperman wrote a squib for his paper, announcing his own engagement to an unknown extra named Janet Gaynor.

When Geraldine Farrar refused to work in "Carmen" because no one in the studio had remembered to put flowers in her dressing room. When MGM tried to safeguard the voice of its new opera star, Lawrence Tibbett, by spraying the set with methol; it burned his throat and he could not sing for days. When Constance Bennett told me she hated Hollywood and everyone in it and was living for the day when her contract would expire—(it has expired and she is trying to get another).

Loretta Young told me about one of those great-hearted gestures so typical of this business. On a set where Jack Haley was working, an out-at-the-elbows old extra was given a chance to play a small role. It meant a lot to him—a $25 check instead of $7.50. He tried hard to do the bit satisfactorily, but his anxiety was too great and he muffed the dialogue until the director finally flew into a rage and ordered him off the set.

"Jack took the director aside and talked him into postponing the scene," Loretta said. "Then he took the old man home that evening and rehearsed him until he was letter perfect. Next day the extra played it without a hitch."

Ran into Andy Devine, sporting a beautiful "shiner." When I asked "how come" he explained he got it from his young son. Said that he was reading the evening paper when the kid came in and started asking questions. Like most fathers, Andy paid no attention but just answered "sure, sure" to every query. Suddenly he received a solid clout on the eye. "What did you do that for?" he demanded. The Devine offspring answered, "I asked if you wanted to see the new punch I learned today, Daddy, and you said sure!"

On the Kay Francis set, an extra girl lost her purse containing $50—probably all she had. After a fruitless search, the director warned her that it is never safe to carry money on a studio set. He demonstrated by displaying his "roll"—37 cents. Basil Rathbone produced a $1 bill. Kay Francis had one quarter and a dime in her purse. We concluded that extras carry their salaries with them, while well-paid workers carry only small change. Which recalls the time Edmund Lowe invited me to dinner, signed the check—and then borrowed two bucks to tip the waiter!

Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson

It is time, I think, to sound a warning against a habit that is growing pernicious, namely, the indiscriminate underleading of Aces.

Not so many years ago a player who lead away from an Ace in defending against a suit contract was looked upon with horror as having committed one of the cardinal bridge sins. The growing ranks of experts, however, paid scant attention to this disapproval; they found a myriad of cases upon which the lead of a low card from an Ace was the best available. Unfortunately, inexperienced players, who accept and enjoy tricky leads and plays more enthusiastically than understandingly, have taken to leading away from Aces with a lack of discrimination that approaches abandon. Today's hand is a striking example.

Both sides vulnerable.

	♠ A ♡ 9 8 ◇ J 10 7 5 4 2 ♣ Q J 10 3
♠ 9 8 7 ♡ Q 10 6 2 ◇ A Q 3 ♣ A 7 2	North West East South	♠ 4 3 2 ♡ J 7 4 3 ◇ K 6 ♣ K 8 5 4
	♠ K Q J 10 6 5 ♡ A K 5 ◇ 9 8 ♣ 9 6

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

South's rebid was a stretch—a two spade bid was all that his hand justified.

West, to protect his heart and diamond tenace positions, hit on the opening lead of the club deuce. When dummy's ten was put up East made the eminently correct play of refusing to cover! A poor player in East's position probably would have put up the King and by doing so would have saved the game, but I am sure that every expert would be "fixed" in East's position. The lead of the deuce from West strongly suggested, though it did not actually guarantee, four clubs. To cover the Queen and risk annihilation to a likely Ace in the South hand would be to establish two club tricks in dummy for discards while the spade Ace remained as entry. East knew that on the bidding West should have figured South, not North, as the strong hand. Thus, there was no reason for West to play North for the club King, which, of course, is always the prime reason for the underlead of an Ace.

The lead, when correctly used, is based on the theory that the about-to-be-dummy will show up with the King or King-Jack of the suit led and that declarer, with nothing in the suit or the Jack and a small card, will guess wrong, thus losing to a possible Queen in East's hand. But, as I have said, the only time to underplay an Ace is when the expectation of strength in that suit in dummy is justified.

As a result of the opening lead and East's natural refusal to jeopardize his King, the contract was easily fulfilled. Declarer led three rounds of hearts, ruffing the third with dummy's Ace, and later could not be prevented from cashing his own six trump tricks.

West was right not to lead away from either hearts or diamonds originally, but he overlooked the fact that a trump lead would in all probability risk nothing.

Scouts Prepare For President's Review Today

4,000 Thrill Crowd With New Installment of 'Cavalcade.'

Glorifying the American Indian, the industry and the wheat fields of their region, 4,000 Boy Scouts from the Midwest and Great Plains States last night swept to an arena victory over another capacity crowd in the Monument grounds.

Fourth spectacle in the "Cavalcade of Scouting" series, which continues tonight and tomorrow night, the show brought to a close the first week of America's first National Boy Scout Jamboree.

President Roosevelt will make an inspection tour over the encampment today.

Approximately 25,000 persons jammed the arena and north slope of the Monument to feast their eyes on a program of Indian dances, exhibitions by the Drum and Bugle Corps of Racine and Superior, Wis., cowboy rope spinning, fort building, signaling and mass acrobatics.

Little Sickness.

The little sickness and small number of accidents among the campers continued to amaze public health officials yesterday, with only 101 cases reported since the encampment of 27,000 Scouts and leaders opened June 30.

"Half of these boys would not have had medical attention if they had been at home because their parents would have taken care of them," commented Dr. W. I. Smith, Public Health Service surgeon, who is chief medical officer.

Stanley Brown, jr., of Marblehead, Mass., who was operated on Sunday for a ruptured spleen, after receiving a quart of his father's blood continues to improve in Naval Hospital, Dr. Smith declared. While there are eight cases of mumps, no two of them came from the same section, he reported.

All was tense expectation last night in the 350-acre tented city along the Potomac following an announcement that President Roosevelt will make an inspection tour this afternoon.

Scheduled also to review the 27,000 Scouts tomorrow morning along Constitution avenue, the President will preface the formal ceremony with a one-Scout-to-another encampment visit at the conclusion of today's all-star baseball game. His car is expected to arrive at the foot of the Avenue of Flags, on Seventeenth street midway between Washington Monument and Lincoln Memorial, about 4 p. m. There he will be joined by Dr. James E. West, chief Scout executive.

May See "Neighbors."

The honorary president of the Boy Scouts of America probably will follow no set course in his drive through the Jamboree grounds but he is virtually certain to pay a call on his neighbors from Dutchess County, N. Y., who are bivouacked west of Arlington Memorial Bridge.

Cowboy songs, Indian raids on settlers, a covered wagon parade and other reminders of the old West will be revived in the arena tonight when 3,000 Scouts from Wyoming, Kansas, Nebraska, Texas, Colorado, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Missouri, Illinois and Iowa display their wares. The performance will begin at 8 o'clock.

With the Jamboree closing Friday afternoon, plans were nearing completion yesterday for the tremendous mass exodus. About 90 per cent of the youths and their leaders came to Washington by train and they will go home the same way.

With one eye on the calendar, the boys yesterday spurred their efforts to fill autograph albums, load knapsacks with souvenirs and round out their sightseeing before the final assembly call is sounded Friday.

Nearly 400 Sea Scouts toured the Naval Academy yesterday and other thousands went to Mount Vernon, with more troops scheduled to visit the Washington shrine today and

Scouts of School Blast Area Witness Dust Explosion Tests

Texas Group Sees Demonstration at U. S. Arlington Station; Two Helped to Clear Debris at New London.

Three leaders and 15 Scouts from the vicinity of New London, Tex., scene of the school gas explosion catastrophe this spring, are attending the Jamboree. Yesterday they witnessed a demonstration of dust explosion at the Arlington (Va.) Testing Station of the United States Department of Agriculture.

The visitors from Texas, accompanied by about 20 other Scouts from New York, saw Dr. David J. Price give an exhibition of the explosive force of various types of inflammable dusts.

Ira J. Moore and Wellington Watson, survivors of the New London tragedy, were among the observers of the tests. In the aftermath of the Texas explosion they aided in clearing away the debris, other Scouts said.

Scoutmaster Bill Mote, of London, Tex., who is accompanying the Texans, said he lost his son, Marion Wayne, 15, and his daughter, Patty Anna, 11, in the accident at the Texas school. "My son was signed up to come to this Jamboree," he said, "and our church in London sent me in his place. It's a very real honor to me, a privilege to be here. Considering the circumstances, I have had a very pleasant time. I'm glad I came."

The Scouts of New London and the surrounding communities rendered great services to the distressed town after the accident, "performing all the jobs which youngsters usually do," Mote said.

The New London School, the second largest rural school in the world, which was demolished by the gas accident, is being rebuilt with the finest equipment that can be bought, the Texas Scouts said. "The new building," they pointed out, "will be if anything more elaborate than the one which was destroyed."

One of the group of Texas Scouts here for the Jamboree is Renny Allred, nephew of the Lone Star State's Governor James V. Allred. Others in the group include Billy Larryford, Victor Hohns, J. L. Wallett, Gene Dupree, Mason Hunt, Jackie Clark, Lewis Geer, Harold Hopkins, Newton Spraggins and Glen Chappell. The scoutmasters attending the Jamboree are J. L. Horner, Bill Mote and Frank Garrett. Patrol leaders are Joe Baker, Carl Durham and Jack Taylor.

Chile Boy Scouts Pay Tributes to George Washington

"In spite of the confusion of our times, the disappearance of so many institutions and so many principles before the force of irremediable events, Scouting has come out triumphant and continues unperturbed its transcendent task," said Alvaro Vicencio, international commissioner of the Chilean Boy Scouts.

The speaker paid tribute to the memory of George Washington and expressed gratitude for the invitation to attend the first National Jamboree of the B. S. A.

Arthur A. Schuck, deputy Chief Scout Executive, responded to the address. The Chileans presented medals to a number of Scout leaders.

French Markets Reopened.

Paris, July 6 (AP).—A decree of the ministry of finance, published under the full powers law recently granted the Chautemps government to save French finances, ordered the reopening of commodity markets today. The decree suspended the closing orders issued June 21 at the height of the fiscal crisis.

2 Scouts Catch Filling Station Robbery Suspect

Two Boy Scouts appeared in Police Court yesterday to testify in a robbery case that also furnished them with their good deed for the day.

Robert Y. Burch, 2138 Thirtieth street northeast, a member of Troop 99, and his friend, Jerry Nolan, 13, 2406 Thirtieth street northeast, did their good turn last Saturday when they apprehended a man alleged to have robbed a filling station of $51.

Both boys testified they were in the station at 3107 Bladensburg road northeast when a man came in, opened the cash register, scooped up the money and fled.

Shouting to Deon J. Edelin, 52, proprietor of the station who was outside, they started in pursuit and caught the man after a short chase.

Arraigned before Judge Edward M. Curran, the defendant was said to be James W. Marceron, 47, Lanham, Md. He pleaded not guilty and was held for the grand jury on a larceny charge.

2 Jailed in N. Y. Racket.

New York, July 6 (AP).—Six-month prison terms were given two admitted participants in New York's $1,000,000 artichoke racket by Federal Judge C. Knox today, and two others received suspended sentences following pleas of guilty.

Hawaiian Scouts to Receive Monument Chips Tomorrow

The Rothwells, father and son, and the Hawaiian delegation to the Boy Scout Jamboree will be the leading figures in a camp ceremony scheduled fro 5:15 p. m. today.

Chips from the stone taken from Washington Monument in January, 1936, to make way for insertion of a tablet sent here for Hawaii, will be presented to the islands' representatives by Franklin E. Rothwell, the mason who removed the granite block from the 368-foot level.

Daniel Rothwell, 87, his father, who is one of the few surviving stone masons who worked on the original construction of the shaft from 1880 to 1884, also will participate in the ceremony. Father and son, who live at 1500 Minnesota avenue northeast, will present the chips to a Washington Scout group which, in turn, will turn them over

Clad in native costumes, the islanders will accept the gift after one of the chips has been offered to Dr. James E. West, chief Scout executive, as a memento. The program will be part of a coast-to-coast radio broadcast.

The Rothwells, who have for four genertaions been stone masons, have kept the bushel basket full of chips closely guarded in their home awaiting the Jamboree.

The Hawaiian stone which was inserted in the Monument, is about 4 feet wide, 2 feet high and 8 inches deep. The slab which it displaced had to be chiseled out in small bits.

Paul Siple, of York, Pa., the Eagle Scout who went to Little America with Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd, and David Martin, the Eagle who accompanied the late Martin Johnson to Africa to photograph wild game, also will be on the radio

Torch Service Will Mark End Of Scout Show

Final Campfire Ceremony Set for Tomorrow at Monument.

Farewells will be said tomorrow night, when Jamboreenos, all 27,000 of them, assemble in the Monument Theater for their closing campfire and "Cavalcade of Scouting" pageant.

The fire, lighted June 30 at the first mass assembly, will be extinguished as the boys get together for the last time, many of them never to see one another again. Torch bearers from campfires throughout the encampment will enter the arena from all sides to bring back the fire carried away on opening night. They will plunge their flaming torches into the council fire from which they were drawn.

As taps sounds and the flames die, Scouts with bowed heads will stand in silence symbolic of the end of this their first great gathering of boyhood in America.

But first there will be a moving, vibrant pageant featuring Scouts from 25 foreign lands, Alaska and Hawaii, and the States of California, Oregon, Washington, Arizona, Nevada, Idaho, Utah and Montana.

The discovery of gold in California, the explorations of Lewis and Clark, the epic of dancing by Hopi Indians, Spanish dons and senoritas, padres and mision bells will be unfolded in the movement of thousands of boys across the greensward.

Then will come 800 Scouts to the stage, American boys who next month will represent the more than 1,000,000 Boy Scouts at the Fifth World Jamboree in Holland. After revealing what they intend to do "over there," they will assemble in front of Chief Executive James E. West and, from the hands of "Uncle Dan" Beard, receive the American flag, which has flown before the general headquarters tent since the Jamboree opened.

This will be the official flag of the American contingent and will fly above its headquarters in the tulip fields near Haarlem.

Co-operation Is Key To Security, Says Cleric

Bretton Woods, N. H., July 6 (AP). Co-operation and mutual sharing, rather than class war, was seen by the Very Rev. Francis P. Lyons, of Chicago, as the solution of the Nation's economic difficulties in an address tonight at the seventeenth biennial national convention of the Catholic Daughters of America.

Miss Florence M. Winter, of Washington, D. C., director of the National Converts' League, urged the convention to carry on the crusade against Communism "every moment of the day, by prayer and works."

House Library Group Meeting This Morning

Chairman Collins, of the House sub-committee on District appropriations, and Public Library officials are scheduled to be heard this morning by the House District Committee. The hearing is on Collins' bill to authorize construction of a new central branch library.

If the committee obtains a quorum, the long-delayed abattoir bill also will be voted upon.

Malta Fever Outbreak Spurs Milk Inspection

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Band Concerts, Pillow Fights, Enliven Day at Jamboree Camp

Lowell Thomas' Broadcast Another Highlight; Commentator Tells How Scout Chief Overcame Serious Affliction.

By Jack Parker—Troop 5.
Post Special Jamboree Reporter.

Scouts from our section of camp were mildly surprised yesterday morning when a band marched up the street playing "Organ Grinder's Swing." However, the band, from Lexington, Ky., had done it just for a lark. It then reverted to marches.

JACK PARKER.

Also yesterday morning a rousing good pillow fight was held in the middle of the street, to the amusement of both the participants and the spectators, who had coming running at the yell of "fight!" The gladiators were boys from our neighboring State across the river. The set-to lasted about 15 minutes, and you can be sure it was "all in fun."

At 5:45 p. m. yesterday, another of the many radio broadcasts from "tent city" took place, having as star, Lowell Thomas, famous news commentator. A crowd of about 70 assembled outside the N. B. C. tent long before the scheduled appearance.

When Thomas arrived the anxious crowd moved out to the roadway to get a closer view and also to snap a few pictures. Applause greeted him as he walked into the studio.

Of course he gave reports on the latest news and listed a few oddities about the camp. The one about the scout from Texas who is 6 feet 6½ inches tall, weighs 200 pounds, and wears size 14 shoes, provided the greatest laugh.

Thomas told of Dr. James E. West's early life, stressing the point that one scout chief, like Theodore Roosevelt, was a cripple when young, but overcame his affliction to a great extent by sheer will power.

Thomas then signed off, and was immediately surrounded by autograph seekers.

Real Indian Scout Feared Lost Here, But Soon Found

For a few minutes last night it was learned a wild Indian was loose on the streets of Washington.

It happened in the Washington Monument grounds. The mock Indians in the Boy Scout performance had just finished their tribal dance when the following announcement issued from loud speakers:

"Folks, Johnny Teton is lost. He is an Indian and speaks no English. He is from Pocatello, Idaho, and if anyone finds him communicate with his scoutmaster, Lorenzo Parker in Section F. Johnny was lost on a hike to the Capitol."

Five minutes later came the report: "The Indian boy has been found."

It seems Johnny was never lost at all. A full-blooded Shoshone, he just got himself misplaced or someting—Johnny is but 13 years old—and he was on the premises all the time.

British Boy Scouts Favor Washington, Dislike New York

Scouts from the British Isles generally like Washington and did not like New York. "We found New York a dirty and bustling city," they said, "not at all as we had hoped it would be."

Apparently the Scouts had expected Gotham to be a gleaming white city, and were sadly disappointed, for all agreed they would not like to live there long. Washington, on the other hand, has lived up to their expectations, they said.

The American Scouts, the visitors said, are "a bit fresh."

"We hadn't been here five minutes," one Scout from Londonderry said, "before they were trying to trade anything they had for anything we could offer. We didn't bring much to barter with, because all of our equipment had to be carried on our backs."

Jamboree Sidelights

Oregon Scout Guesses Weight of Big Salmon, Is Awarded Fish as Prize; Indian Exhibit Is Popular.

Scout James W. Scoggins, from Oregon, was being congratulated yesterday as the winner of the salmon weight-guessing contest. Thousands of boys guessed, the fish being frozen in a cake of ice displayed in the Boys' Life tent. But Jimmy's guess was right on the nose—24 pounds 11 ounces. His prize? The salmon.

At tonight's arena show Assistant Secretary of the Interior Chapman will ride in the nineteenth century stage coach brought here from Colorado. The coach was used in Yellowstone for many years.

Happiest boys in camp last night were the 45 from Clarksville, Tenn., and Hopkinsville, Ky., who received Annie Oakleys for today's all-star ball game at Griffith Stadium. Their benefactor is Dr. Frank Bassett, of Hopkinsville, president of the Kitty League.

One of the most popular exhibits in Jamboreeland is that of Troop 20, Section I, from the Missouri [illegible] arrowheads and along the Missouri River in North Dakota.

The nickname contest closed last night, with hundreds of Butches, Sourpusses, Stinkys, Mudfaces, Koochys and Pupsys on the entry list.

Mount Vernon, one of the most popular points of interest for the Scouts, was host to 12,847 of the campers during the first four days of the gathering. Virtually every one of the 27,000 Scouts and Scouters will have visited the shrine before camp is struck Friday afternoon.

Scout Bill Gentell came out yesterday with the boast that his face has more freckles than any other in camp. His claim was accepted as a challenge by comrades who also possess the russet-colored beauty spots in large quantities, and a freckle contest is in the offing.

King George Greets Scottish Debutantes

Edinburg, Scotland, July 6 (AP).—King George VI paid tribute to his Scottish consort tonight by holding the first royal evening court Scotland has seen in more than 30 years.

Nearly 500 attended the function held with all the formality of similar affairs in Buckingham Palace. More than 200 were presented to their majesties, the majority of them Scottish debutantes who usually must journey to London for presentation at court.

Confessed Girl-Killer Is Before Grand Jury

Los Angeles, July 6 (AP).—The county grand jury met in special session tonight to hear prosecutors demand a murder indictment against a 32-year-old WPA worker, confessed sex slayer of three little Inglewood girls. The WPA worker, Albert Dyer, was summoned as the first witness, District Attorney Buron Fitts said, to repeat the confession attributed to him Sunday night.

D. C. Night Club Managers Glad Fourth Is Over

Fiddler at Wardman Park Dodges Candid Camera; Swim-Dances Popular.

By Chanticleer

The Fourth of July of 1937 is now part of history and can never be duplicated. And as far as the night club managements of the Nation's Capital are concerned, once a year is plenty long enough for the celebration of the Declaration of Independence. But as the calendar would have it, both Sunday and Monday were holidayfied. It was "get-out-of-town over the Fourth," and those people who visited our city this last week-end were too busy with the Boy Scouts' Jamboree to want to visit our night spots. But, as we said, it's part of history, and that's that.

Night before last, at the Metronome Room in the Wardman Park Hotel, there was enough room to do a square dance with six people. Sitting up there on the orchestra stand, Jimmie Santmeyer and his lads were playing smoother than ever. And what do you think Anthony Finelli, the bass fiddle player, was doing? He was dodging the camera eye of one of these "snooping" candid camera playboys. Tony is bashful enough as it is, and he admits he is Washington's most bashful musicians, but to see him manipulate one of musicdom's largest instruments was a treat.

As we predicted several columns ago, the swim-dance idea at the Wardman is proving more than just a fad. Many of the younger as well as the older set are coming out for a brisk swim and following it with a dance in the air-conditioned night club.

Miss Yvonne Ashburn, who with her partner, Harris Ashburn, are just now giving very artistic "dance drama" or "ballroom ballet" performances at the Shoreham, are a boy and girl team, about which New York dance critics and present critics at the Shoreham Terrace prophesy big things. Under the title of the Social Cosmopolites, they do some sleek numbers sleekly costumed. In one dance, Yvonne wears a sequin cape which weighs no less than 35 pounds.

Harris and Yvonne are young Americans, who have danced their way from Hollywood all over the world. The Texas Rockets—a ballet of beautiful Texas girls—whoopee—are on the same bill.

The Lotus Restaurant has scheduled a brand-new novelty program for this week's entertainment and claim to have the largest cast of beautiful girls in Washington. The Van Sisters, and you may take a peek at them on this page, are still dancing in perfect rhythm and modern dance tempos. Just to remind you, the Lotus presents three complete shows every day. The first show is at 1 p. m., the next at 7:30 p. m. and the last at 11:30 p. m. Also, as a reminder, the Lotus is air-cooled. There is never a cover charge and the music is furnished by Bill Strickland and his Capitolians.

Well, did you satisfy your little selves we were telling the truth last week about the Three M's at the Hi-Hat? Really, these fellows have something on the ball. If there are still any doubting Thomases lurking about who might be inclined to disbelieve the statement the three lads pack more melody into one song and extract more harmony out of three instruments than any trio in the city, all you have to do is to drop in at the Hi-Hat and see for yourself. The mint julep is the feature this week . . . and maybe every week.

Was over to the Nightingale spot the other night and was told the place was going to have a change in orchestras . . . and did they need it? Yes, sir. The genial host, Mr. Nightingale, runs around the place and looks after everyone. We like that. The real Virginia atmosphere, if you like it. The new orchestra moves in tonight and will be the popular aggregation of the Moods and Blues, led by Watson Powell. The band comprises ten pieces and, believe me, for the size of the dance floor the bigger the orchestra the better. The floor show will need a bit of pepping up, but all that will come very shortly, just as soon as the management hits the right combination for the patrons. And, just before closing, we want to go on record approving of the delicious steak dinner.

Keep your ears open, folks, we have the word an addition will be made to the entertainment program at the Mayfair . . . Jack and Leo are keeping the guests pretty well satisfied with the smart musical hits and bits.

The third assistant to the fourth relates that the birthday party out at the Boulevard Farms the other night was a great success . . . the wine was done way with . . . the chickens disappeared . . . the flowers were distributed . . . and now the little fellow has but pleasant memories of that memorable evening . . . maybe we'll get to go to the next one.

One is bound to wonder at the pace the patrons set at the Brinkley emporium and on more than one occasion our scout has returned from this spot with tales of merriment and joviality that have made us wonder. Not that we, too, have not witnessed interludes of high comedy and mirth at that spot, but more because of the infectious manner in which our fledgling scout reports the doings. There is something about the whole establishment, from the music of Bandmaster Carl Gunther to the community singing of the customers, that lends itself to a good time for everyone. Note, there is no formal dress required.

Word reaches this column that many of the acts that played the spots here in Washington are doing all right for themselves at Virginia Beach. Eddie Daniels, who was M. C.-ing at one of the local night clubs, is doing the same at the Crystal Club, and the Lyons twins, who appeared here for 13 weeks, are with Eddie. Bourban and Baine, the dance team, are at the Cavalier.

Lindbergh Ends Visit.

Lympne Airdrome, England, July 6 (AP).—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh landed here this afternoon from France after four days of conferences on St. Gildas Island with the scientist, Dr. Alexis Carrel.

Dancing Van Sisters at the Lotus

2 Colored Youths Leave Annapolis; Inquiry Planned

Representative Arthur W. Mitchell (Democrat), of Illinois, only colored member of Congress, was to start investigation at Annapolis today of the resignation yesterday of George J. Trivers, colored, whose appointment Representative Mitchell confirmed several weeks ago.

Mitchell said that another colored youth, James L. Johnson, jr., appointed to the Academy, had been dismissed because of bad eyesight, deficiency in English and deportment. "I want to get the facts in this case," Mitchell said.

Mitchell talked by telephone with Acting Superintendent Todd at the Naval Academy. He quoted Todd as saying Trivers had offered no complaint at the time of his resignation, but had admitted he was unfit for naval service.

Fire Kills 21 Patients.

Hiroshima, Japan, July 6 (AP).—Barred from escape by iron grillwork on the windows of a private sanitarium, 21 patients were killed today when the building burned down.

Two Men Missing In Delaware Flood

Wilmington, Del., July 6 (AP).—Two men missing more than 100 families homeless, flooded highways and property damage which may reach hundreds of thousands of dollars was the result today of a heavy rain, in upper Delaware last night.

The missing men are Frank Ridgeway and Harry Uselton, of Pondtown, Md. Their car was swept into the flood from a mill race, which had broken its banks.

Flying Club to Seek 2 Unreported Airmen

Warren, Ohio, July 6 (AP).—The Warren Flying Club announced tonight an airplane search would start at daybreak for two young aviators who failed to arrive here after taking off from Peru, Ind., in a club-owned plane. They are Bob Sherwood, 24, son of a Warren resident, and Neal Pennell, 20. They left Peru between 3 and 4 p. m. yesterday.

Name 'Prince' Is Eliminated From Passport

Judge Grants Permission but State Officials Refuse to Use Russian's 'Title.'

Cutting through a maze of red tape that ran from the State Department to the Labor Department, thence to District Court and back again to the departments, Justice Joseph W. Cox has issued an informal ruling permitting "Prince Leonide Ourusoff," a Russian nobleman by birth but an American citizen by naturalization, to obtain a passport.

The prince, who lives at 21 Cedar parkway, Chevy Chase, Md., is the son of Prince Serge Ourusoff, who was a diplomatic officer of the czar. Prince Leonide came here in 1926 and acquired citizenship. Coming to Washington—he obtained his citizenship papers in New York—he was placed in charge of the Washington Gas Light Co.'s testing laboratory.

Until he applied for his passport, no question of the validity of his name or title had arisen. "Then there arose the question of whether an American citizen could use the name "Prince" and the passport as finally issued did not contain it. It was explained that, when the naturalization papers were issued the prince was told he had renounced allegiance to every "foreign prince, potentate, state or sovereign" and could not use the title, "prince."

The Labor Department was referred to, and Justice Cox in an informal ruling at the request of that department said he did not see why a man could not use any name he pleased and he suggested that there was no violation of the law in issuing a passport to to be issued to "Prince Leonide Ourusoff." However, the passport eliminated the term prince, though it was not stated whether it was a term or a title or a name.

Police Are Offered In Guild Walkout

Seattle, July 6 (AP).—Mayor John F. Dore today assured a committee representing the strike-closed Seattle Star and the Seattle Central Labor Council and American Federation of Labor affiliates, he was willing to use police to clear American Newspaper Guild picket lines if requested.

The paper closed Saturday when guild members in the news, advertising and circulations departments went on strike during a jurisdictional dispute with the teamster's union over union affiliations of 19 circulation men.

Rod L. Brink, managing editor of the Star, hailed Dore's move to instruct Police Chief William H. Sears of his decision by announcing he would not ask such protection, officially, until advised by the Star's general counsel. The Star is a Scripps newspaper.

On the Air Today

As is fitting and proper, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will inaugurate the new studios of the National Broadcasting Co. tonight when she broadcasts her weekly program from the Trans-Lux Building, where both WRC and WMAL are now located. For her guest on the No. 1 program to be broadcast from the present scene, Mrs. Roosevelt will have Mrs. Fred W. Denniston, jr., of New York. The topic for discussion is "White House Keeping," and will be heard over WMAL at 6:15 p. m. Sorry, but the public is not invited as yet. We must wait for the grand opening which will be held very soon.

Try and call WRC these days. Half of the staff is still in the National Press Building and the other half is enjoying the cold blasts of the air-conditioner at the Trans-Lux Building. One telephone in the new studios connects the many souls therein with the outside world. That was yesterday. Pity the poor switchboard operator for N. B. C., plugging away and the wrong party answering her signals . . . and the time table corrections that are sent over to this desk daily . . . today N. B. C. printed the corrections on yellow paper . . . always has been white . . . spoke to six different people over there via the phone before I knew who I was talking to . . . and was in turn taken for Bill Coyle, Carleton Smith and Kenneth Berkeley. . . .

No matter where you turn the dial of your radio this afternoon between 1:15 and 4 p. m., the description of the annual All-Star baseball game, which is being played here in Washington at the Griffith Stadium, will be your program. The game is being broadcast by the blue and red networks of the National Broadcasting Co.; by the Columbia Broadcasting System and the Mutual Broadcasting Co.

Tom Manning will do a solo job for both the red and blue of N. B. C. Tony Wakeman will be aided by Bob Elson, of Chicago, for Mutual and Columbia intends to use the services of Arch McDonald, France Laux and Bill Dyer. In event of postponement, the game will be broadcast the following morning by the three chains.

(Note: The press release on the All-Star game coming out of New York spells it Arch MacDonald. But we know better . . . and Griffith Stadium is described as "huge.")

"Ta Ra Ra Boom De Ay," the reigning song hit of the gay nineties, will be one of the high lights of Andre Kostelanetz' program tonight. Another instrumental feature will be Andre's version of two Rodgers and Hart melodies, "Lover" and "Love, Here Is My Heart." Frank Parker contributes a special arrangement of Vincent Youman's "Without a Song," interpolating the colored spiritual, "Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen." WJSV, 8 p. m.

When Walter O'Keefe steps into the microphonic shoes of Fred Allen tonight, the fine hand of Harry Conn, who wrote the first Burns and Allen air series and who was associated with top-ranking Comedian Jack Benny for 4½ years, will be noticeable. Conn will devote his versatile talents particularly to situation comedy. O'Keefe announces that as a feature of the new series he will revive one of his best-known novelty acts, the "Dramateurs." Unsuspecting members of the studio audience will be selected at random to join the Town Hall crew on the stage and read roles in dramatic scripts that they have never seen before. WRC, at 8 p. m.

Other features:

7 p. m., WJSV—The new series, "Cavalcade of Music," will feature the songs of Irving Berlin. Don Vorhees and his orchestra and guest barytone Conrad Tribault will bring to the air many of the country's "classics."

7:30 p. m.—WJSV—Lorraine Bridges, Hollywood songstress, will make her first coast-to-coast radio broadcast as guest singer with Ken Murray. It was Murray, remember, who discovered Harriet Hilliard, Polly Waters and Marlyn Stuart.

8:30 p. m.—WJSV—Jessica Dragonette and Charles Kullmann will present Victor Herbert's "Sweethearts" on the Beauty Box Theater this evening. The musical romance concerns the pretty Sylvia, reared since infancy by a peasant woman who found her abandoned in a field.

10:15 p. m.—WOL—From Jasper National Park, Alberta, the farthest northern point of civilization in the Canadian Rocky Mountains, the music of Joe Decourcy's Orchestra will be broadcast by the Canadian Broadcasting Co. and the Mutual affiliates.

Here and there . . . it needed only two sentences to sign Burgess Meredith to play Hamlet in the C. B. S. cycle of Shakepseare plays . . . but those two sentences required 15 minutes . . . Meredith was playing the leading role in "High Tor" in New York when Brewster Morgan, director of the C. B. S. series, telephoned him . . . "How would you like to play Hamlet on the air?" Morgan asked . . . "Hamlet?" Meredith replied . . . "Why . . . good gosh! There's my cue . . . hold on . . . Morgan held on . . . and on . . . and on . . . Fifteen minutes later Meredith's voice came over the telephone again . . . "Yes, I'll play Hamlet. When?" . . . "July 12, at 8 p. m. . . ." The deal was made. C. S.

Shenandoah Park Visited by 18,554

Front Royal, Va., July 6 (AP).—The largest number of visitors entered the Shenandoah Park over the holiday week-end since the northern end was opened in October, 1936.

A check showed 4,024 vehicles carrying 18,554 passengers entered the park in the Saturday-Sunday-Monday period. Nearly 12,000 persons visited the park Sunday.

The highest previous record for a three-day period was 15,000 on May 29, 30 and 31.

47 Bank Directors Sued for $6,000,000

Chicago, July 6 (AP).—Forty-seven directors of the Continental Illinois Bank & Trust Co. were named defendants today in a suit for accounting involving more than $6,000,000.

The suit, brought by Emanuel Skolnick, a Continental stockholder, He asked that the directors be ordered to repay the bank for all losses, estimated at more than $6,000,000, which were incurred by the bank's agreement to liquidate the People's Trust & Savings Bank here in 1932.

Britain Adds a Billion To Equalization Fund

London, July 6 (AP).—Royal approval was given to the government's exchange equalization account bill today after passage by the House of Lords.

The measure is designed to add 200,000,000 pounds (1,000,000,000) to the equalization fund to help Britain fulfill its monetary agreement with the United States.

Mexico's Air Transport Facing Strike Tie-up

Mexico City, July 6 (AP).—The Mexican aviation syndicate, threatening a strike, today notified the Mexican Aviation Co., Pan-American Airways affiliate, it would not negotiate until the company abandoned proposed wage reductions.

The company filed a petition with the labor department recently for permission to cut salaries. A company spokesman said the concern lost $170,000 last year. The syndicate said it would call a strike July 15 which would tie up not only mail and passenger service in the country but routes to Central American and the United States.

Windsor's Friend Made Ambassador to Portugal

London, July 6 (AP).—Sir Walford Selby, British minister to Vienna who befriended the Duke of Windsor after he quit the British throne, has been named Ambassador to Portugal, it was announced tonight.

Sir Walford, who is 56, has been to Vienna since 1933. The transfer raises his rank, and reports from Vienna said it was understood he would be entrusted with negotiations concerning British-Portuguese relations in connection with the Spanish civil war.

Mother of Ten Admits She Aandoned Twins

Buffalo, N. Y., July 6 (AP).—The mother of twin baby girls now 6 weeks old, Mrs. Mary Regina Pohl, pleaded guilty today to charges she abandoned them in a rain-swept field June 10.

County Judge Bret F. Thorn released her on her own recognizance so she could go home and care for eight other children. He set the case for hearing at the fall term. Mrs. Pohl had been held for observation and treatment at City Hospial, same sinstitution where the twins, Dolores and Yvonne, have thrived since they were found.

Speeding Jails Fiermonte.

New York, July 6 (AP).—Enzo Fiermonte, Italian pugilist and husband of the socially preminent Mrs. Madeline Force Astor Dick, was sentenced today to five days in prison when he pleaded guilty to a three-year-old speeding charge.

5 Men Await Death In Virginia Slaying

Richmond, Va., July 6 (AP).—Four colored men and a white man will die in Virginia's electric chair at the State Penitentiary between now and September 3 unless Gov. Peery intervenes.

In the dim-lighted death row here are Sylvian Huffman, white, sentenced to die July 20 for the murder of an Augusta County country merchant; James Jackson, Hampton colored man, sentenced to die for the robbery-slaying of a merchant on Friday, August 13; Lawrence Wyche and Willie Leake, Greensville County, condemned for the murder of a colored boy, and sentenced to die on August 20, and Hersey Sawyer, of Norfolk County, whose electrocution for the murder of his wife is set for September 3.

'Tobacco Road' Closes After Showboat Sinks

Michigan City, Ind., July 6 (AP).—The Navy has "sunk" that storm-tossed windjammer of the theatrical seas—"Tobacco Road."

The play, banned by Mayor Edward J. Kelly of Chicago and opposed by Mayor R. C. Fedder, of Michigan City, had been presented for the past month by a troupe aboard the showboat Dixiana. But yesterday the naval training ship, U. S. S. Hawk, rammed its bowsprit into the anchored theater barge near the Franklin street bridge. The scenery, said the producers, was ruined, and, so far as this company was concerned, the run was ended.

Nudist Colony Sought For Clew to Murder

Spring Valley, N. Y., July 6 (AP).—Police Chief Abe Stern led a search in woods near here today for a reputed nudist colony where, he said, might be found the answer to the death of a man Sunday two miles from town.

The body, the head bashed, was unclothed except for socks and shoes. Chief Stern said he was following a "tip" in searching for a nudist colony.

Farmers of 5 States Ask More Federal Aid

Aberdeen, S. Dak., July 6 (AP).—Declaring a crop failure exists over parts of five Middle Western States, executives of Farmers' Union organizations met here today to map an aid program.

They drafted resolutions asking the Administration for more liberal Federal grants, extensive and immediate seed loans, and a "breathing spell" for farmers owing money to the Federal Government. Representatives from North and South Dakota, Montana, Nebraska and Kansas attended.

German Glider Pilot Soars for 132 Miles

Elmira, N. Y., July 6 (AP).—Peter Riedel, of Germany, today turned in the longest flight of the eighth national soaring contest when he piloted his motorless plane on a 132-mile flight to Rideoute, Pa., not far from Warren. Riedel sent word here from Warren that he had attained an altitude of about 8,400 feet, which officials said might constitute a record.

Ann Rutledge's Greatest Charm, Her Charity

Inspired the 'Broad Humanity' Of Lincoln, Believes Historian

Mrs. Josephine Chandler, of Washington, Has Done Wide Research on New Salem Period of Martyred President's Life.

By Malvina Lindsay.

IN NEW SALEM State Park in Illinois there was recently dedicated a log cabin that has re-created for America the scene of one of its most famous courtships, that of Abraham Lincoln and Ann Rutledge.

To a resident of Washington, Mrs. Josephine Craven Chandler, 1719 Hoban road, this event was of special significance. Mrs. Chandler's writings of the New Salem period of Lincoln's life had helped give impetus to the movement that led to the restoration of the pioneer village. And it was while listening to the stories of Ann Rutledge from the lips of an old woman who had been Ann's intimate friend that Josephine Craven, as a young girl, had felt the urge toward the historical research that has made her an outstanding authority on the six impressionable years—1831-1837—that the youthful Abe Lincoln spent at the Illinois outpost.

Born within a few miles of New Salem, Mrs. Chandler was nurtured on Lincoln legends. Her great-aunts had known Lincoln; Duff Armstrong, son of the man Lincoln cleared in the "Almanac murder case," frequently came to her father's home; Dr. Charles Chandler, pioneer physician of the region and father of the man she was later to marry, had been a close friend of Lincoln's. But it was on one summer afternoon when in her late teens she was visiting "Aunty" Hill—the Mrs. Samuel Hill, of Salem days—that she came closest to Lincoln. And that through Ann Rutledge.

Ann Loved Platonically.

"Aunty" Hill, who as a girl had been a companion and confidante of Ann, told of the days when the tavernkeeper's daughter had been wooed by the 24-year-old Lincoln, who already had been storekeeper, lawyer, postmaster, surveyor and candidate for the Legislature. "Aunty" Hill displayed pieces of the "bottle-green" flannel, from which she and Ann had made duplicate riding habits, and she showed her young visitor the one photograph of Ann Rutledge ever known to have been in existence and which later was lost. Mrs. Chandler remembers it now as a faded ambrotype of a slender young girl with intelligent eyes and a kind, gentle countenance.

"Aunty" Hill, according to Mrs. Chandler, was "entirely unsentimental." She invested neither Ann nor Abe with any dramatic "great lover" qualities. While Ann undoubtedly had a strong affection for Lincoln, she was not passionately in love with him, insisted "Aunty" Hill, but had turned to him as a solace after the supposed defection of her fiance, John McNamar. Moreover, "Aunty" Hill ascribed Lincoln's reputedly insane ravings following Ann's death to the delirium of malarial fever rather than a disordered mind. Nevertheless, pioneer realist that she was, she admitted that Lincoln was deeply in love with Ann and profoundly influenced by her personality.

Secret of Her Charm.

"What was that personality?"

Mrs. Chandler's restrained historical recital was halted by the eagerly asked question. Here was the thing every woman wanted to know—at least every woman who realized that the Ann Rutledges of life possessed an intangible, enduring essence that the Cleopatras lacked. What was this quality that had enabled a 21-year-old girl to live so vividly in the memory of a great man, perhaps through him influence the destiny of a nation? What had Mrs. Chandler's own research shown? Had Lincoln merely idealized his first love affair? Or did Ann Rutledge have "something?"

"Yes, Ann Rutledge had 'something,'" said Mrs. Chandler slowly. "As I see it, the chief thing she had was a large charity, a great kindliness. The Rutledges were a family noted for their generosity, their helpfulness. They were the kind of people who are always at somebody's bedside. As a daughter in a large family, Ann worked hard. She gave of herself freely both to her family and to others.

Inspired Lincoln.

"I believe the large kindliness that Lincoln manifested throughout his career was in part his heritage from Ann Rutledge. Ann helped develop that side of his nature in the few years of their association." Mrs. Chandler pointed out that Edgar Lee Masters in his poem from the "Spoon River Anthology" that is engraved on Ann's tombstone expressed the same idea in these lines:

"Out of me unworthy and unknown
The vibrations of deathless music;
'With malice toward none, with charity for all'
Out of me the forgiveness of millions toward millions."

Yet Ann as Mrs. Chandler sees her was by no means a saintly wraith, but a wholesome well-balanced girl, very efficient, pretty enough to be the village belle and also mentally ambitious. Lincoln had inspired her to study grammar and in the summer of 1835 when she succumbed to the fatal malarial fever she had planned on going the following fall to the Jacksonville Female Seminary.

It was her mental alertness as well as her kindliness of nature that made Ann appreciate Lincoln and perhaps sense his greater destiny, Mrs. Chandler believes. Only two other women in her opinion share that distinction—Lincoln's mother and his wife.

Not a "Ladies' Man."

"Strange as it may seem," said Mrs. Chandler, "women were not quick to appreciate Lincoln's qualities. Certainly not during the New Salem period of his life. While men of the community openly admired his physical prowess, his skill at story telling, his superior mind, the women did not take kindly to him, at least not socially. They respected him, but like 'Aunty' Hill and my own great-aunts felt that his parlor manners were crude. The men felt instinctively Abe would 'get somewhere.' Yet women for all their boasted intuition apparently did not see this.

"Ann Rutledge, however, had mind enough to appreciate Lincoln and when he took residence in her father's tavern their friendship grew into a betrothal. According to the inscription on the old stone this took place July 4, 1833. Everyone knows of course of how Lincoln in the summer of 1835 when malarial fever struck the community helped Ann nurse three members her family; of how he went back to his surveying and was summoned when she was found to be dying of the same disease; of how he sat by her bedside an hour and had her sing in her weakening voice a song they loved; how after her death he sat for an hour alone under a great walnut tree that is still standing, and how later he himself took the fever and in his delirium raved of his dead sweetheart."

Wife Guided Him.

In later years another woman, the one who was to become Lincoln's wife, met him and also believed in him. For Mary Todd, Mrs. Chandler had much admiration, believing she has been misunderstood by some of her biographers.

"Without her, Lincoln would never have become President," said Mrs. Chandler. "A woman of great political acumen and with a political heritage, she had sensed something extraordinary in Lincoln from the first, and felt that greater opportunities were ahead of him. She had stepped down from a high social position to marry him and she became a driving political force in his life. She believed he would be President and she steered his course toward that goal. When he was offered the territorial governorship of Oregon, she induced him to refuse it. That crucial decision ultimately led him to the White House.

Besides her published monograph on "New Salem: Early Chapter in Abraham Lincoln's Life," Mrs. Chandler is the author of "The Spoon River Country," a literary geography, and a biography, "Dr. Charles Chandler: His Place in the American Scene." She is active in many women's organizations and is now serving as national chairman of art of the National League of American Pen Women.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

New York, July 6.

MARGARET PEMBERTON, a favorite hostess, a connoisseur of clothes and a talent spotter for her husband, the theatrical producer, Brock Pemberton, has just gone into a strange new business. She has underwritten a bald-headed men's hair-growing method, because she couldn't help it. She explains it thus: "Suppose you had been married to a man for 20 years, and 10 of those years he has been bald as an egg on the top of his head. Then along comes a man with a remedy, and after three months of treatment your husband grows a strong, thick, new mane. Would you believe in miracles, or wouldn't you?"

ALICE HUGHES.

My answer was, "I believe nothing. You gotta show me." So she accompanied me to her husband's office and there, indeed, was Brock with a brand-new head of hair. "They call me 'Brock, junior,' now," he said. "I haven't had as much hair as this on my head in years." It was true. I've sat behind him in the theater often enough to remember his now vanished baldness.

This is how it came about: Brock Pemberton formerly employed an Italian actor named Lino Manzoni in his road company of "Strictly Dishonorable." This actor, proud as are many Italians of their fine heads of hair, found his own falling out in bunches. He remembered an old native remedy from his birthplace; spent several months between engagements doing research on it, and then asked his employer, Brock, to act as guinea pig. It took a 20-minute treatment every day for three months—but the results are there. And so now Margaret Pemberton is ablaze with her new mission.

If you grow annoyed every time your cook smashes a dinner plate, consider the plight of the New Yorker Hotel, whose annual breakage bill amounts to $8,000. That is at the rate of about 175 plates a week. These plates cost 90 cents apiece, the management says in a big placard placed on the swinging door where the waiters receive their trays. For holding the championship record in crockery breakage, I'll put up my cook any day of the week. She's a swell cook; has the kindest heart—but the slipperiest fingers in the world.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—The prettiest radio fashion announcer is Betty Goodwin of N. B. C. Sitting over a lunch of fresh raspberries the other day, she announced her favorite dish: an Italian concoction of ham, veal and hard-boiled egg, called Salta en Bocco, which means it jumps right into your mouth . . .

Ann Goodman, whose papa owns New York's most de luxe store, wears her powder, lipstick and rouge in three clanking metal gadgets suspended from her belt. An old-fashioned style comeback . . .

I watched Helen Menken, the actress, dining at the Colony the other night in a most elaborate black-and-white dress, with jewels at her throat. But her hands, beautifully expressive ones, hadn't as much as a chip diamond. No rings or bracelets; no nail polish; just beautiful hands . . .

It makes some women good and mad to be taken for a salesgirl. I saw this happen to Kitty Carlisle, who looked so like a model in a navy-and-white alpaca dress piped with white patent leather, that a fellow customer stepped up and asked that the same outfit be delivered to her. Miss Carlisle flashed her big, broad smile and said, "Sorry. You'll have to place your order with a salesgirl." What do you say when this happens to you?

Today's Health Talk

By Dr. Logan Clendening.

Chronic Fever Infection.

Several years ago a new disease was discovered in the United States. That is, it was new to the United States and fairly new to the world. Originally it was called Malta fever because it was found on the Island of Malta. It consisted in an infection due to the use of infected goat's milk. The symptoms were a long drawn out fever, which might last as long as a year or more.

It was a surprise to public health officials when this disease was discovered in the United States, because it was supposed that it could only be obtained from goat's milk, and this is a rare commodity in this country. But it has since been learned that the disease can infect cows, and that when this fever gets into the cow's body, the germ will be excreted and appear in the milk.

The cases at first reported in this country were of the acute or subacute character. They resembled a mild case of typhoid fever, though with a much more prolonged period of fever than is usual in typhoid.

Lately we have had a report which suggests that a good many people have these undulant fever germs in their systems and that they produce a mild and chronic form of ill health. In a report before the American College of Physicians last month, this chronic brucelle infection was discussed. Reports on a number of patients who had received different sorts of treatment, showed that they gave evidence of this sort of infection.

In order to find out how common it was, a large group of school children was examined, and it was found that about 7 per cent of them gave evidence of chronic brucella infection. This group, when their records were examined, was notable for the fact of frequent absences from school and a general condition of being physically under par. In a large number of cases also it was found that they were in the habit of drinking raw rather than pasteurized milk.

If these conclusions are accepted, we have a public health problem of considerable importance on our hands. The condition can be avoided by the use of certified or pasteurized milk.

Questions From Readers.

M. B. S.: "What, in your opinion, is a good cure for pimples and blackheads — diet, medicine, salve, cleanser, or otherwise?"

Answer: The skin is usually greasy and should be kept dry with a good, non-irriating soap. The blackheads should be squeezed out with a comedone extractor. X-ray cures a certain number of cases if the condition is severe, and sometimes the use of a substance known as Antuitrin "S" hypodermically does some good.

Bathing, Golf Among Favorite Health Builders

Women Advised to Go Easy on Games and Exercise Regularly.

By Carolyn Abbott.

THE THOUGHTFUL woman first considers the health features of a game before deciding on just which sport she will take up for the summer. Picking a sport is no longer just a matter of stepping into a store to pick up some interesting-looking paraphernalia.

Swimming is the most complete exercise of all. Nearly all your muscles are brought into play to some extent in this sport.

Golf is excellent exercise because it involves lots of walking. It is good for the balance, according to players and coaches, because rhythm is an important feature. But there are those who insist that the five-mile walk involved in an 18-hole golf match may be too strenuous for the average woman.

Tennis is a sport that is good for agility and grace. But it takes stamina. Three sets of tennis mean quite a pull on the heart and lungs. And women with well-developed calves should remember that all the foot work involved in tennis is not going to reduce leg muscles a bit.

Most women crowd all their athletic activity into a week-end, neglecting their muscles the rest of the time. Athletic trainers warn women to be moderate in their sports activities and to be regular to get full benefit from them.

Artie McGovern, trainer of Babe Didrikson and other women athletes, recommends fencing as a woman's sport and offers these bits of advice:

Go easy on all games.
Be systematic about exercise.
Wear a mild support for the abdomen.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Girl Tells Man She Loves of Past Mistakes; He Now Says Marriage Can Not Be; She Asks Advice.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a college graduate and a business woman. One year ago I met socially a young man in my same profession, and we were accidentally and casually attracted to each other at first meeting. Thereafter we saw each other frequently and eventually entered into unwed intimacy. Our association has been almost completely happy, and after a few months he grew to love me—that I know. Then he asked me about my past.

* * * *

During college and shortly afterward, I had gone, consecutively, with two men. I was intimate with each; but only because, foolishly and misguidedly, I honestly believed their protestations of undying love and naturally supposed the relationship would eventuate in marriage.

* * * *

When this man asked of my past, I intuitively assumed that frankness was better than deception, so I told the truth. He was severely hurt; so much so that he decided we could never marry. Since then, he has recurring moods of jealousy and suspicion. I can be calm and patient under his accusations and explain the circumstances, for I love him—so much that I have broken most of my friendships and have forsworn nearly all my social life, and feel little loss.

* * * *

But tell me: Is there anything I can do other than the proving of my fidenity to correct the impression he has? If I could show him that I am absolutely devoted; if he could be made to understand that because I was not be virtuous before I knew him, it doesn't mean that I could not and would not be virtuous now, then we could marry. Can you help me? REPENTANT.

The Thing To Do.

DEAR REPENTANT: Your lover isn't a very consistent and generous man, to refuse to condone, or attempt to understand the occasion of, sins which he himself is ready and willing to commit. His capacity for sick jealousy and morbid suspicion would make him a very poor husband for a "woman with a past," so-called. So far as I know, the only way to convince him of your sincere repentance of the mistakes of your youth; and to convince him of your fundamental moral stamina and ability to live a more disciplined and virtuous life in future, is to put an immediate end to your relationship with him. Tell him you are doing it because you do love him; and because you can no longer bear to subject this really fine emotion, which has come your way at last, to the deflement of unhallowed intimacy with a man whose very mental attitude toward you threatens to destroy whatever potentialities of beauty and nobility it may possess. M. H.

A Mother's Contribution.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Never before in my life have I written anything for newspaper publication, but I just can't resist the challenge of the letter signed "Informed," which appeared in your column of June 15, in which the writer maintained that "pre-marital intimacy" is necessary for discovering the proper mate!

* * * *

I am a widow with a grown daughter, a posthumous child. As a girl I was supposed to be pretty and more or less attractive. I had plenty of opportunities for the experience advocated by "Informed." However, my ideas of the sanctity of marriage were formed from observation of my own parents. I never saw two persons more congenial or more happily married.

* * * *

When I began to discover that platonic friendships were out of the question, I made up my mind definitely that the man who claimed my body would claim it legally and lawfully. Otherwise, how could I look into the clear, trusting eyes of my children and know that I was worthy of their respect, confidence and love?

* * * *

It would be much more to the point if young persons in love, thinking of marriage, would consult a reputable physician and follow his sane, wholesome advice, rather than allow themselves to be carried away by their emotions and then dignify their laxity by defining it as romantic experimentation. When the novelty of honeymoon days has worn off, and two people are no longer young, they will be very fortunate, indeed, if mutual love, trust and respect remain. Premarital experimentation is just another name for promiscuity, and the so-called liberal young moderns are reckless enough already, without being further encouraged by such propaganda as "Informed" would scatter abroad. Capt., Mrs. Dorn Celebrate 57th Anniversary Today

By Hope Ridings Miller.
The Post Society Editor.

More than half a century of married life—57 years, to be exact—will be celebrated in a quiet fashion today by Capt. Edward C. Dorn, U. S. N., retired, and Mrs. Dorn in their apartment at the Highlands.

No special party has been planned. Friends who have known the Dorns over a period of years doubtless will call on them informally throughout the day, and this evening the two will enjoy a family dinner ("nothing elaborate," they said) with Mrs. Dorn's nephew, Lieut. Comdr. C. G. Halpine, U. S. N., retired, and Mrs. Halpine as their guests.

District of Columbia residents since 1880, Capt. and Mrs. Dorn have seen the Capital grow from a straggling town on the banks of the Potomac into the city it is today. Rutherford B. Hayes was President when they were married and came to Washington to live. Since then they have been in the Capital, off and on, during the administrations of 13 Chief Executives.

But neither Capt. Dorn nor his wife have sat idly on the sidelines watching the passing scene as mere spectators. They have been a vital part of Capital life for many years.

Capt. Dorn Had Colorful Career.

Born in Potosi, Wis., of German parents, Capt. Dorn was educated in St. Louis and was graduated from the U. S. Naval Academy in the class of '74. In 1880 he married Elizabeth Anne Halpine, who was born in London, and who was living at that time with her parents at Irvington-on-the-Hudson, N. Y.

Shortly afterward he was appointed to a position in the hydrographic office here, and the young ensign and his bride came to the Capital to make their home. The hydrographic office in 1880 was in an old frame building at the corner of Seventeenth and F streets, and Mrs. Dorn selected as their home a small house not far away at the corner of Twenty-first and H streets.

Through the eighties and the nineties he filled a variety of naval posts and became a captain, and in 1905 he was retired. But the most colorful part of his career had not yet begun. In 1902 he was made naval governor of Samoa, and he and Mrs. Dorn, both of whom were widely traveled, went to the South Sea island to make their home.

Went to Guam As Naval Governor.

His record in Samoa attracted favorable attention from the President, Theodore Roosevelt, and a few years later—in 1907—Capt. Dorn was made naval governor of Guam. So successful was this term of office that when it was finished the natives of the island petitioned the Navy Department to extend his term and he remained in Guam as naval governor until 1910. According to reports from friends who have known the Dorns for many years, Mrs. Dorn was most helpful in making her husband's term of office a success, and she was as beloved by the natives as he was.

Coming back to Washington after their sojourn in Guam, the Dorns took a house at 1729 Twenty-first street, where they entertained frequently and became again an important part of Washington's official and social life. During the war, Capt. Dorn was called back into service when he became head of the Navy Relife Society.

Both Capt. and Mrs. Dorn have been affiliated with a number of clubs and organizations in Washington and have continued to increase their circle of friends since they first came to Washington more than half a century ago. Their fifty-seventh wedding anniversary today probably will be an occasion for countless informal calls and congratulatory messages from persons who have, known them and enjoyed their hospitality through the years.

Mrs. Donaldson To Appear in 2 Summer Plays

'Frances Starr' Will Leave July 19 for Role at Union College.

Mrs. R. Golden Donaldson—better known as Frances Starr, the actress—will have a busy and interesting summer.

She will leave July 19 for Schenectady, N. Y., where she will play the leading role in "Beau Strategem," at the Mohawk Drama Festival at Union College. It was this play in which she appeared in Washington in 1928 when she met Mr. Donaldson. A short time afterward they were married.

In August Mr. Donaldson will go to Ogunquit, Me., where she will take the leading role in Noel Coward's play, "The Queen Was in the Parlor"—a drama never before produced in America. Mrs. Donaldson and Noel Coward have been friends for many years, and when he was in Washington last winter, she and her husband entertained for him several times.

At present Mrs. Donaldson has two guests, her sisters, Mrs. George Van Tuyl, jr., and Mrs. Blanche La Moure, of New York. The end of the week, they will leave for New York, and Mrs. Donaldson will go with them.

Mrs. Donaldson is one of Washington's most popular hostesses, although much of her time is spent away. When she is here she frankly admits she misses the excitement of the theater—the rehearsals and the tense hours before opening night.

Her most recent appearance on the stage in Washington was in "The Two Mrs. Carrolls," produced by the Theater Guild. Although she has been the heroine in a number of plays, and holds the record of being the youngest actress whom David Belasco ever pushed to stardom, she admits her favorite play was "The Case of Becky," which appeared a number of years ago.

Hugh Jones, Bride To Live in Mass.

Miss Jean McMillen Is Wed at Middleville, N. Y.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh R. Jones, who were married July 3 at Middleville, N. Y., will be home after September 17 in Cambridge, Mass., where Mr. Jones will resume his work in the Harvard Law School.

Mrs. Jones is the former Miss Jean McMillen and is the daughter of Capt. Fred E. McMillen, Supply Corps, United States Navy, and Mrs. McMillen, who are stationed at Norfolk, Va. Mr. Jones is the son of Mrs. Hugh R. Jones, of New Hartford, N. Y.

Mrs. Robert J. Schneider, of Troy, N. Y., acted as matron of honor for her sister at the wedding. The maid of honor was Miss Jane Anne Jones, a sister of the bridegroom. The Rev. Howard M. Lowell, of New Bedford, Mass., acted as best man.

Miss Caskey Becomes Bride

Former Mayor's Daughter Wed to Louis Dillon at Martinsburg.

A wedding of interest to Washington took place last evening in Martinsburg, W. Va., when Miss Margaret S. Caskey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Caskey, of Martinsburg, was married to Louis Norman Dillon, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Dillon. The ceremony took place in the Christ Reformed Church. Mr. Caskey is former Mayor of Martinsburg. The Rev. Dr. A. M. Cluck officiated.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a gown of white silk lace, fashioned on princess lines, the skirt terminating in a long train. Her tulle veil was held in place by a cap of tulle.

The attendants were Mrs. Wilson Caskey, Miss Polly Dillon, sister of the bridegroom, of Hedgesville, and Miss Madolyn Shrum, of Hedgesville and Clarksburg, W. Va. They wore frocks of powder blue lace fashioned with full skirts and high necklines. Miss Edna Beard, who was maid of honor, wore a frock of peach lace trimmed with powder blue.

David Dillon was best man, and the ushers were Wilson Caskey, brother of the bride, Burney Branham and Miller Riner, of Hodgesville; William Stephens, M. A. Robbins and Ward Miller.

59 Boys and Girls Leave For 2 D. A. R. Camps

Mrs. Saunders, Head of Junior American Citizens' Committee, Bids Them Good-by; Happy Group to Have 2-Week Outing.

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

MRS. JOSEPH SAUNDERS, chairman of the Junior American Citizens Committee of the Daughters of the American Revolution, yesterday waved goodby to 59 boys and girls she had been instrumental in sending to camp for two weeks' vacation. The 37 girls went to The Cedars, maintained by the Council of Social Agencies, and the boys to Camp Reeder, directed by Mr. Charles Fyfe, of the Boys Club.

The children, all members of the Junior American Citizens Clubs, sponsored by the D. A. R in various schools of the city, qualified for camp by attending every club meeting during the winter season, contributing to the patriotic programs and having a clean school record in character education and citizenship.

Forty Chapters Contribute to Fund.

Contributions to the camp fund have been made by 40 D. A. R. chapters this year, and it is the first time all of the children have been sent for a period of two weeks. In other years they have had a week or ten days at camp. Mrs. Saunders, Mrs. Charles Carroll Haig, State regent of the D. A. R. for the District, and other State officers expect to visit the boys on Sunday, July 18, and the girls on Saturday, July 17, just before they return.

All of the youngsters were well and happy as they left yesterday. The boys had been given physical examinations at the Boys Club, and volunteers from the school medical department's corps of physicians yesterday morning examined the girls.

The girls were off at 11 o'clock in buses and cars from Friendship House, and the boys at 1 o'clock from the Boys Club, with Mrs. Saunders and parents and brothers and sisters there to see them go. Later in the month five more girls and three boys who were unable to leave yesterday will be sent for their two weeks at camp.

Dorothy Hancock Chapter, in addition to making a large contribution to the camp fund, sent a girl and two boys from the John and Dorothy Hancock clubs of Fairbrother School. Miss Jean Warfield, vice chairman of the Junior American Citizens Committee and a member of the chapter, has been responsible for its keen interest in the camp project.

Mrs. Kenton Aids Three Children.

Mrs. Augustus Kenton, regent of Eugenia Washington Chapter, has sent two boys and a girl from the club at Wheatley School, which is named for Robert Morris, her great-grandfather.

Mrs. Saunders' nephew, Mr. Vernon Turnburke, of St. Paul, who has two young sons of his own, learned with interest of the camps and is sponsoring two boys of Lafayette Club, one from Seaton and the other from Gales School.

Twenty-one of the girls and four of the boys who went to camp yesterday are members of the Betsy Ross Club, which meets at Friendship House in Southeast Washington.

The Junior American Citizens Club started about 14 years ago, when Mrs. Earl Fuller was chairman of the committee and have been increasing in number and growing in membership, with the opportunity to attend summer camp one of the most important features.

Moose Women To Entertain

Youths From Mooseheart, City of Children, Maintained by Order.

Four Boy Scouts from Mooseheart will be entertained this afternoon at a picnic given by members of Columbia Chapter, Women of the Moose, at Rock Creek Park. Mrs. Hans Sorenson is in charge of arrangements and the young guests of honor are William Roberts, Eugene Powers, Charles Doyle and James Byron.

Mrs. Charles W. Kennedy, wife of the regional director of the Order of the Moose, described the work at Mooseheart before the recent conclave of the Maryland and Border States Moose Association, held in Lebanon, Pa., from which local members of the order have just returned. Mrs. Kennedy has visited Columbia Chapter here on several occasions.

"Mooseheart, the city of children, lies in the Fox River Valley, in Illinois, and is visited by an average of 150,000 persons a year," she said. "Many go to study its system of child care and training.

"The children, full or half orphans, from the time they enter until the yeave receive the finest mental, physical and religious training it is possible to provide for a child.

"Twenty-five trades," said Mrs. Kennedy, "are taught, equipping the children to go out and earn their own living, and instruction is also given in music, athletics, dramatics and public speaking. This year 53 boys and girls were graduated at Mooseheart."

Mrs. Kennedy also described the home for the aged members of the order at Orange Park, Fla. There, too, is a little community, with cottages and other buildings. Residents do whatever they are able for its upkeep and are compensated with small salaries. Birthday parties, lodge meetings and an occasional dance vary the routine, and many of the men enjoy fishing in the St. John River. A farm which they themselves maintain provides milk and vegetables for the several hundred men and women who live there.

Harriet Tuft Is Honor Guest At Tea Today

Chairman of Panhellenic Congress to Be Feted by Capital City Club.

Miss Harriet Williamson Tuft, chairman of the National Panhellenic Congress, will be guest of honor this afternoon at a garden tea being given by Mrs. Homer Jones and members of the Washington City Club of Beta Phi Alpha, at Mrs. Jones' residence, 2930 Chesapeake street. The hostess, past grand president of the fraternity, is widely known in Washington as Alice C. Hanson, assistant chief of the cost of living division, United States Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Receiving with Miss Tuft and Mrs. Jones will be Mrs. Joseph Grigsby, president of the club; Miss Miriam Johnson, representative of the city Panhellenic; Miss Ruth Ashburn, of Alpha Eta Chapter at George Washington University, and Miss Dorothy Jean Hill, of Beta Chapter at the University of Illinois.

The committee assisting with arrangements includes Miss Maude Wharton, Miss Miriam Johnson, Miss Dorothy Jean Hill, Miss Mildred Alter, Miss Elsie Francis, Mrs. Bertrend Curran, Miss Wilma McCulloch, Mrs. Joseph Grigsby, Miss Ruby Swanson and Miss Virginia Young.

Among the guests will be representatives of the 23 national Panhellenic women's fraternities in the Capital and of the faculties of George Washington and American Universities and the University of Maryland.

Many Beta Phi Alphas from the college and alumnae chapters scattered over the country are visiting in Washington following the close of the annual convention of the fraternity, held in North Carolina from June 28 to July 3. Among those who will be present at the tea are Miss Helen Halversen, of Kimball, S. Dak.; Miss Esther Gunderson, of Chicago; Miss Nancy Gaffney, of Toledo; Miss Mamie Marquardt, of Berkeley; Mrs. Charles Hall, of Cleveland; Miss Mabel Crinkley, of Minneapolis; Miss Lydia Ann Storli, and Miss Norma Storli, both of Portland, Oreg.

Miss Tuft, whose home is in Berkeley, is the guest of Mrs. Jones during her stay in Washington. At the recent national convention of Beta Phi Alpha she was re-elected delegate to the National Panhellenic Congress, which is made up of representatives from 23 national women's college fraternities. Miss Tuft has previously served as treasurer and as secretary of National Panhellenic Congress, of which she is now chairman. After her visit here she will go to New York City and Syracuse to confer with inter-fraternity leaders regarding the meeting of the congress in October in New York City. From New York she will return to California by way of Florida.

Mrs. Will Rogers Gives Luncheon

Wives of members of the Oklahoma Congressional delegation yesterday afternoon were entertained at luncheon at Mrs. K's Toll House Tavern by Mrs. Will Rogers, wife of Representative Rogers. The Oklahoma group has maintained an informal club this season, meeting together for luncheon each month.

The guests yesterday included all the members of the delegation except Mrs. Wesley E. Disney, who has already returned to her home in Tulsa. Mrs. Rogers, accompanied by her daughter, Miss Nell Rogers and her niece, is leaving by motor today on her return West for the remainder of the summer.

Others who were present at the luncheon included Mrs. E. B. Howard, wife of former Representative Howard, of Oklahoma; Mrs. Harold Mueller, and Mrs. Fair Boyette, Mrs. Starr Brimm and Miss Beulah Faye Brimm, of Oklahoma City, and Miss Aldia May Fox, of Grandfield, Okla.

Off for Summer Vacations in North

Mrs. Arthur H. Vandenburg, right, wife of Senator Vandenburg, and Mrs. Ralph Church, wife of Representative Church, both members of the woman's advisory committee of the National Republican Committee, snapped as they talked things over following a meeting. Mrs. Church, with her son, William, and daughter, Marjorie, has departed by motor for their home in Evanston, Ill., to spend the remainder of the summer. Ralph Church, jr., is remaining in the Capital with his father during the Boy Scout Jamboree. Mrs. Vandenburg, with Senator Vandenburg and their daughter, Elizabeth, spent the holiday week-end at Locust Point, N. J., as guests of former Senator and Mrs. Warren Barbour. Miss Vandenburg went from there to a house party in Scranton, Pa., and will go directly from Scranton to Holland, Mich., for the rest of the summer. Mrs. Vandenburg will stay in the Capital until about July 15, when she will join her daughter.

"Madame Chairman" . . .

By Suzanne.

One of Washington's few women choir directors, Mrs. Ruby Smith Stahl, has attained such distinction through the work of her a capella choir she has been invited to present it in a concert Sunday night at Chautauqua, N. Y., summer mecca for devotees of the arts.

She became director of the choir of the First Congregational Church in 1924, when the President and Mrs. Coolidge attended there. Three singers then members of the choir, Miss Martha Blanchard, Mr. Stanley Covert and Mr. Claude Hanan, are still included in the membership of 60.

Mrs. Stahl has succeeded in subordinating technical performance to the spirit of the song without sacrificing the former. All of the choir's singing is done not only without accompaniment but also without the score. The balance of parts is kept intact when any changes are made in the personnel of the chorus, and although there are four soloists (Mrs. Stahl taking solos for the soprano section), while singing with the group, they work as a whole for a pure tone, blending their voices rather than permitting either tone or quality to stand out individually.

The director has built up in her choir not only a spirit of unity in singing, but also a feeling of comradeship and mutual helpfulness.

Rehearsals are held once a week, with additional practice at Christmas and Easter for special programs. New members joining the choir also are required to rehearse an hour and a half after the Sunday morning service. It now sings eight-part works, and new singers often find difficulty in reading the score. Various parts are represented in the officers of the choir. James Fleck is president succeeding Don Waite; Charlotte Hobbs, vice president succeeding Dorothy Seaton; Carl Freeman, treasurer; Percy Mettler, attendance secretary; Janet Strite, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Jessie Kennedy, assistant corresponding secretary.

Mrs. Stahl for several years has gone to Chautauqua for her summer vacations and has sung there, but the concert Sunday will be the first given there by her choir.

Her first efforts in the interest of music in the District were as chairman of music for the D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs some years ago. One proect she inaugurated at that time was a plan for paying artists who were invited to sing or play before the clubs of the federation. A fund for this purpose was established through a concert she arranged, and for some time the practice of paying artists for their programs was continued.

Miss Willye Smith, chairman of membership for the Women's Overseas Service League, is awaiting word from the Cleveland convention of the organization as to whether or not the Washington unit has made the record gain in members this year. An increase of 50 members during the season is the result of Miss Smith's chairmanship. She sent in the names completing that number to Miss Rose Brady, national treasurer, just before the convention opened.

A prize has been offered for the unit having the largest increase in membership during the year, and Cleveland, as the convention city, was a close contender, with a total of 36 new members reported the third week in June.

Among the Washingtonians attending the national conclave is "Mother Stead" (Mrs. Nathaniel Stead), one of the best-loved members of the local unit, who gained her name through her canteen work in France. Others there are Mrs. Fred W. Franke, past president of the Washington branch of the league and a candidate for vice president of the Third Corps Area; Miss Sadie Caughey, Miss Martha Peden, Mrs. John Robbins, Miss Ida Curlett, Miss Faustine Dennis, Miss Irene Claveloux, and Miss Florence Adams, a member who lives in Baltimore.

Miss Ruth McClelland, editor of the national league's magazine, Carry On, is spending the summer in Galesburg, Ill., and went from there to Cleveland for the sessions. Mrs. Lucretia Botsford, who was elected treasurer of the Washington group for the coming year, had planned to be at the convention, but was unexpectedly transferred from Washington to Alaska, and left for her new post Saturday night.

* * * *

IF YOU like an accordion, you should hear it played by Betty McFayden, daughter, of Mr. and Mrs. A. D. McFayden, who is home from Duke University for her summer vacation. Betty is worth watching also as she plays, for her face is as expressive as her music. She presents such numbers as "The Bumble Bee," more frequently performed on the violin, and Liszt's Rhapsodies, and then swings into popular airs with equal ease and brilliance.

She has played on several occasions before the North Carolina Society's meetings and has given benefit programs for charity during the last year at the university. She comes by her talent naturally, for both her mother and father are musicians. Her mother, by the way, is vice president of the North Carolina Society and former president of the Washington Alumnae of North Carolina Woman's College.

FASHION NOTE: Beg to suggest the Boy Scout shorts be generally adopted as a summer costume for the Capital—they look so nice and cool.

Mrs. H. C. Boone To Be Delegate

War Mothers' President Will Help Dedicate Memorials Overseas.

MRS. HOWARD C. BOONE, national president of the American War Mothers and a resident of Washington, will sail for Europe July 14 aboard the Manhattan as a delegate to the dedication of war memorials overseas.

Mrs. Boone received notification of her selection as one of the delegates while on a recent visit to her former home in Kansas City, Mo. She received a telegram from Gen. Pershing and also one from the War Memorials Commission.

She returned last week from the West, stopping in Detroit to confer with the committees there on arrangements for the national convention of the American War Mothers, for which the Detroit chapters will be hostesses on September 28.

With other delegates to the ceremonies in Europe Mrs. Boone will return to this country on the S. S. President Roosevelt August 20.

Women's City Club Plans Get-Together

Dinner Arranged for Thursday at Clubhouse.

The Women's City Club will have a "get-together" evening with dinner in the coffee room of the clubhouse Thursday night, followed by a social hour. Mrs. Raymond H. Keller is to be hostess.

The next event for club members and their friends will be the cotton carnival, outstanding feature of the summer calendar, on the night of July 15. Another "get-together" dinner is announced for July 22, followed by a book chat, with Miss Blanche Crapo as hostess. The final event for the month will be the sunset cruise on the Potomac, July 29.

Return From Trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilbert E. Locklin returned Monday from their wedding trip through Pennsylvania and are at home at 1264 Oates street northeast. Mrs. Locklin is the former Mrs. Ruth Banallen. They were married June 28 in Frederick, Md.

Venezuelan Teacher on Visit Here

Impressed by Facilities at Central High; Answers Queries.

Senora Angelina C. de Celis, for 25 years a teacher in the private and public schools of Caracas, Venezuela, is here spending a month as the guest of her brother, Senor Luis Coll-Pardo, and Senora de Coll-Pardo, at their apartment at the Roosevelt Hotel. Senor Coll-Pardo is special tourist commissioner with the Venezuelan Legation.

Senora de Celis visited the summer session at Central High School and was especially impressed with the lunch room. In Venezuela there are none. The students attend school three hours in the morning and two in the afternoon, but are dismissed at noon and the afternoon classes do not convene until 2 o'clock, so they have plenty of time to go home for their mid-day meal.

Miss Coll-Pardo Is Interpreter.

Senora de Celis speaks only Spanish and her attractive young niece, Senorita Luisa Coll-Pardo, who has just been graduated from Western High School here, served as interpreter. Venezuelan schools, she explained, have four elementary grades and two superior ones which correspond to our junior high school. Most girls go directly from the sixth grade to a three-year normal school course by which they are prepared to teach. Only those who expect to attend college, and later enter professions take the high school course. There are few of these and therefore but one high school for girls in the city of Caracas. The boys have high schools of their own.

Questions as to the high school course Luisa answered herself. "It is hard, much harder than that in America, she said. "I was there in my freshman year. All our course was prescribed, there were no electives, but there were seven required subjects. Three recitations a week were devoted to each and studying all done at home."

The teachers came to the students instead of their changing rooms for classes, said Luisa. The changing of classes here, and the orderliness with which it is done, was another thing which impressed Senora de Celis.

Willing to Leave Voting to Men.

Asked about the vote for women in Venezuela, Senora de Celis replied with a slight shrug of her shoulders that they had been working for it, and would eventually have it, no doubt, "but as far as I am concerned I am willing to leave the voting to the men. They are so much better informed in mattters of government."

Senora de Celis is not a member of any of the women's clubs in Venezuela. Although they are not organized as political groups, they are all sooner or later aligned with one side or the other of political issues, she says, and, as a teacher in the public schools she feels it wiser to remain free from such affiliations.

She is now teaching children of the second grade. Discipline is a problem with boys and girls in South America as it is in North America, she says, but corporal punishment is never administered by teachers. Regulations in that respect are exceedingly strict. Penalties for broken rules are of the good old American variety—staying after school and writing lines which are reminders of the infraction.

Y. W. Sponsors Roof Suppers

Camp Stay-at-Home Has First Al Fresco Evening Meal.

COOKING SUPPER on the roof of the Y. W. C. A. was inaugurated last night when senior boys and girls of Camp Stay-at-Home held their firstweekly picnic. This group plans to cook on the roof every Monday evening. Mrs. William Helm is in charge, assisted by Miss Martha Louise Franklin.

The Stay-at-Home campers enjoyed a well-cooked supper of potato salad, hot dogs, pickles, iced tea, chocolate pudding and cookies. With the help of the counsellors in charge, they planned the menu, bought the groceries and prepared the meal.

Americans, Paced by Horton Smith, Dominate British Open Qualifiers

CAPACITY CROWD AWAITS BATTLE OF DIAMOND GREATS

* X. WASHINGTON: WEDNESDAY, JULY 7, 1937 19

Total of 138 Leads Field, Sarazen 2d

By Scotty Reston.

Carnoustie, Scotland, July 6 (AP). Dubbed "Happy Face" by the dour Scots since his arrival in Carnoustie, Horton Smith, the big, blond Missouri boy by way of Chicago, tonight had proved himself a serious contender for the British open golf championship.

Ramming low iron shots into the face of one of the North Sea's better breezes and putting with all his old-time magic, he shot his second straight 69 today to lead 141 qualifiers by 3 strokes to emphasize the American monopoly that obtained throughout the 36-hole elimination.

Defying both the wind and the meandering "burns" of Carnoustie's killing test, Smith posted a total of 138, 4 under par, 3 shots ahead of Gene Sarazen and 4 better than the 142 scored by Byron Nelson, Sam Snead and the inevitable Walter Hagen.

Only after these five American stalwarts had stuck their names atop the scoreboard was Britain able to place a man. Alastair McLeod, blond, 30-year-old member of a famous Glasgow golfing family, and Max Faulkner, son and assistant of a Berkshire professional, managed to sneak in at 143 before the United States, South Africa and Ireland shoved the home-breds out again.

Kirkwood's Standing.

Topping the list of 144 shooters was the veteran Joe Kirkwood, the Australian-born American trick shot specialist, who well-nigh insulted these proud Carnoustie folk by zooming over the adjoining Burnside links in 67, 4 under par and 10 under his first-round score over the championship course, which will be used exclusively when the 72-hole championship proper gets under way tomorrow.

Tied with him were Ed Dudley, of Philadelphia, and United States Open champion Ralph Guldahl; Bobby Locke, sensational 19-year-old South African amateur; Paddy Mahon, from Dublin, and three Englishmen, Walter Smithers, W. C. Hancock and Stanley Stenhouse.

In all, 15 Americans and the American-born British amateur titleholder, Robert Sweeny, made the qualifying limit of 157. Yet, while the American record was impressive enough yesterday and today, the invaders won't be any better off than the rest of the field when the 141 survivors start playing for keeps.

Only two United States entrants failed to qualify. They were Sylvester Ramsay, a native of Carnoustie, who for a time was pro at Greenwich, Conn., and Lee, Mass., and missed out by one stroke, and C. C. Trautner, an amateur from Silver Spring, Md., who posted an 80 yesterday and an 87 today. He announced at the finish that he merely was playing "so the Scotch would believe that somebody from the United States actually does shoot above par."

Boomer-Smith Tie.

Aubrey Boomer, Briton who is a pro at a French club and who tied with Smith in the first round at 69, soared to a 76 on his second eighteen to be tied with Henry Cotton, Britain's choice to succeed Alf Padgham as champion. Cotton added a 72 at Carnoustie to his opening 73, being joined at 145 by Tom Collinge and W. H. Green, both Britons.

One shot further back were Denny Shute, P. G. A. champion and last American winner of the British title, four years ago; Tony Manero, last year's American Open king, and two others. At 147 were Johnny Revolta, who came back with a par 71 at Burnside, and Charley Lacey, burly pro from Great Neck, N. Y. Henry Picard was a stroke further away, Bobby Cruickshank finished with 150, and John Bailey, of Battle Creek, Mich., the lone American amateur to qualify, had 152.

But the story today was Smith and, for a time, Kirkwood. Horton went out in mid-morning, when the rain was lifting off the course and a fresh wind blowing in from the sea.

Beating Par.

A gallery of about 2,00, remembering he had asked to be left off the Ryder Cup team because he thought he wasn't playing well enough, gathered at the first tee and increased by another 500 as he kept beating par.

Smith wasn't quite so steady the rest of the way home. He scrambled for his par at the fifteenth, missed the green, but got his par, at the sixteenth.

The remarkable thing about Kirkwood's round was not that it broke the course record by three shots, but that he never before had played the course.

Another perfect long iron gave him a birdie 3 on No. 13, a stroke he lost at the fifteenth, where mud on his ball knocked an 18-inch putt off line.

Until Smith came along with his 138, Sarazen had led for an hour or so with 141. For the first time in years the little veterans played an almost uneventful round.

Ranger Defender Of America's Cup

Newport, R. I., July 6 (U.P.).—Harold J. Vanderbilt's Ranger was selected tonight to defend the America's Cup in the international yachting series against T. O. M. Sopwith's English challenger, Endeavur II.

The selection occasioned no surprise, since Ranger, only undefeated class J sloop in the world, had run away from the other two cup defense candidates, Chandler Hovey's Rainbow and Gerard Lambert's Yankee, in preliminary trials.

The cup series begins July 31.

Girardians Win Two.

The Girardian split a double header with Indian Head Sunday, losing the first game 10-3 but rallied to take the nightcap 9-7. Pitcher Coe won the latter game with a home run.

A Mid-Summer Day's Dream Game Comes True — By DeMoreland

Dean, Ready For Anything, Awaits Orders

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Dizzy Dean's latest escapade came to a dramatic climax last night when the great one stepped from a plane and promptly denied any knowledge of his purported refusal to participate in today's All-Star game. Dizzy had that "Who, Me?" expression on his amiable pan when interrogated on the subject.

The first intimation he had of his refusal to play in the game was gleaned in Pittsburgh, he said, awaiting a plane for Washington.

"I never said I wouldn't play," he declared, "I can't imagine where that story originated."

Diz added he hadn't been feeling well for the last two and a half weeks, but would be ready to hurl tomorrow if Bill Terry wanted to use him.

Swamped at the airport by several hundred admiring fans and a score of Boy Scouts, Dean did his daily good turn, autographing everything thrust at him. He seemed to enjoy it.

Later, at WOL, where he was interviewed by Tony Wakeman, he called the All-Star game "the greatest thing in baseball," professing to "be proud to be one of the players selected for it."

Dizzy digressed from his subject

Sports Reporter Dodges Traffic to Interview Police, Boy Scouts and 'Gus Phan' on Outcome of 'Dream Game'

By Jack Munhall.

The big-league moguls have removed the 1937 all-star game from the hands of Gus Phan, but they can't stop old Gus from picking the winner or second guessing Managers William Terry of the Nationals or Joe McCarthy of the American League.

Your inquiring reporter risked his pallid complexion in the bright sun to comb the highways and byways and ferret out a cross section of baseball fans who are gathering here for the "dream game" at Griffith Stadium.

The fans ran the gamut from Boy Scouts to Sea Scouts, traffic officers to bus drivers, and from fighters to managers for information pertaining to the winner.

The consensus of polled votes favors heavily another victory for the American League forces who have a 3-1 edge in the four games played. Wise fans based their selections on the superior hitting strength of the American League being sufficient to offset the stronger pitching of the senior circuit.

A surprising majority was given Washington's own Wesley Ferrell as the American League's logical starting pitcher. At the same time, all asked were of the opinion that a tremendous slight was given Johnny Stone, of the Nats, when he was left off the list of American League outfielders.

Next to Ferrell, Bridges was most heavily backed as the opening American League pitcher. Monte Stratton, string-bean fast-ball hurler of the Chicago White Sox was well liked, while Mel Harder, of the Cleveland Indians, who pitched ten scoreless innings against the National League in all-star competition, was not mentioned, possibly in view of his poor record this season.

Hubbell Bests Dean.

Traffic Officer W. E. Klein was directing traffic at Fourteenth and F streets, when we decided to see him.

Dodging autos, cars and buses, your reporter finally found an opening between two trolleys, three buses, a truck and two autos and shot through.

We began: "Are you a baseball fan?"

Through the clamor of horns, his whistle, the grind of stopping street cars, and the screeching of brakes by those motorists who always whiz up to a stop sign and stop with a jolt, we managed to gather that he was definitely so.

"Who did he think should win?"

"I Like Americans."

"Well, being a Washingtonian, I am inclined to pick the American League," he began.

"But is that not a weak reason?"

"It's not that alone," he began to qualify his statement and paused to bellow at the pretty young lady who coyly breezed by his halting hand showing no headlights and masking under the protection of an out-of-town license.

"Why, the American League is better all around. Their hitting will make up for the pitching edge of the National Leaguers. If they place Jimmy Foxx at third, and Lou Gehrig at first, of course, I like them," he concluded.

With the assistance of our new friend we threaded our way through the terrors of "No Pedestrians Land" and hastened to the bus terminal up the street.

There we cornered a bus driver who was about to shove off for Coshocton, Ohio. Everett Lee, a burly Alexandrian, could not understand any doubt as to the winner.

"American a Cinch!"

"You don't think the National League will win?" he got the jump on us and queried.

Noting his size, we stuttered that we did not.

"The American League is a cinch. They have the best hitters and should blast them National League pitchers."

"Dizzy Dean?"

"Yeah, they'll knock him out. Carl Hubbell is their only chance. I think Wes Ferrell or Tommy Bridges would be our best bet."

Henry Moore, of 1754 U street, was the speaker.

"I shore is a baseball fan," he quickly stated.

"The American League has the best players and we kaint lose," he modestly ventured. "I like Tommy Bridges to start and Lou Gehrig to star.

"But Gehrig has had no luck in previous All-Star games," we reminded, but it had no effect.

Of course, no poll of baseball fans would be complete without approaching the crown prince of Washington rooters. So we talked to Benny Mensh. If anyone is not familiar with Benny, he can find him any day the Nats are here in the upper grand stand behind the press box pulling the home team home.

Benny is credited with causing many an enemy pitcher to blow up while all the umpires have reddened under his loud-lunged quips when they have the misfortune to call a bad one.

Benny, who knows quite a bit about the old pastime, offered some sound suggestions.

He Picks Nationals.

"I lean toward the National League because I don't see how any team could beat Van Mungo, Dizzy Dean and Carl Hubbell when they are rested, and they will be Wednesday. They are at their best when the chips are down and while the American League seems to have a consistently better attack I don't see how they can beat that trio," he emphasized.

"The American League could have picked a better team," he mourned. "I am one of many who can not fathom Stone being left off any American all-star squad, and Buddy Lewis is the equal of any third baseman I have seen this year, and I have seen them all," he added.

Freddie Steele, middleweight champion of the world, here for a bout with the up and coming Hobo Williams, the Alexandria Assassin, on July 20, favors the American League.

"The Nationals have the better pitchers, the Americans the better hitters, but I'll string along with the puncher."

Dizzy and Goofy, a Happy Pair

Brescia Given Unpopular Nod Over Bob Tow

Decision Jeered at Stadium; Buddy Scott Wins by Knockout.

By Bill McCormick

The official deciders of last night's heavyweight brawl at Griffith Stadium between Jorge Brescia, of the Argentine, and Bob Tow, the Alexandria Adonis, were seized by a frenzy of Pan-American good will and declared the South American the winner after ten rounds of furious fussing.

Referee Robert (Muggsy) Morris and Judge Bob Eller cast the two votes which made Brescia the official winner. Judge O. U. Singer and the rest of the 2,000 spectators declared in favor of Tow, who had turned in one of the best fights of his careeer.

The contest was fairly even until the fifth round, when Jorge sent first 1,000 fans who are in line at 1:15 o'clock when the general admission tickets go on sale.

Confessing themselves stumped by the glittering array of stars on both sides, New York betting commissioners refused to install either team as the favorite to win. Latest quotations from New York were:

"Six to five and take your choice." Which means that the professional better must lay six against the bookmaker's five and take his pick of the teams.

Manager Bill Terry of the Nationals made no secret of the starting National League line-up, announcing his batting order early yesterday, but Manager Joe McCarthy of the Americans zealously guarded his starting line-up until last night.

Both McCarthy and Terry received last-minute setbacks when they were advised that two of their pitchers would not be available for the game. The Nationals suffered the more severe blow when officials of the Brooklyn Dodgers informed Terry that Pitcher Van Mungo was afflicted with a strained back and would be unable to pitch.

Terry had counted heavily on the Brooklyn fast-baller for the last three innings of pitching duty after Dean and Hubbell had taken three-inning turns against the American League, and Mungo's absence is a shock to his pitching plans.

The Nationals' manager was not due to arrive in Washington until this morning, but there were broad hints from other National League officials he would draft Lefty Lee Grissom, the Cincinnati Reds' Jack Keefe-ish rookie, as his third pitcher. Grissom, author of one of the league's fastest fast balls, has four shutouts to his credit this season, more than any other pitcher in either league.

Stratton Is Out.

The American League's setback took the milder form of an injury to Pitcher Monty Stratton's throwing hand suffered recently at Chicago. The White Sox right-hander did not make the trip to Washington. McCarthy last night was hurriedly attempting to make a replacement.

He had not counted on using Stratton except in a relief role, but, determined to have his team at full strength, McCarthy last night looked over the lists of likely hurlers at his command. There was a brief indication he might choose Monte Weaver, Washington's leading hurler, as the sixth man on the

Dashiell, Ace Official, Dies At Annapolis

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., July 6.—Paul J. Dashiell, retired professor of mathematics of the Navy, with the rank of captain, and as first chairman of the rules committee and football official, probably next to Walter Camp, among the figures in college football in this country, died here today.

Capt. Dashiell, 69, had suffered from arthritis for a number of years, his illness only recently becoming acute. He attended the last Army-Navy football game in Philadelphia, occupying as usual his seat on the players' bench.

From its inception in 1894 to 1911, Capt. Dashiell was chaiman of the intercollegiate football rules committee. During his incumbency as chairman and with his active support, the important changes which mark the modern game were made. The restrictions on the mass plays and the forward pass were among the changes which he supported.

The work of Capt. Dashiell as official of the big games started about 1894, and he acted as the principal official in ten successive Yale-Princeton games and in seven between Yale and Harvard. During most of this time, the rules provided for only one official.

Began at St. John's.

Capt. Dashiell started his active participation in athletics at St. John's College, this city, where his father, the late Dr. Julius M. Dashiell, was professor of ancient languages. There he played football and baseball, later playing both games at Johns Hopkins, from which he received the degree of A. B. in 1887 and Ph. D. in 1891.

As an instructor at Lehigh for two years, 1889-1890 and 1891-1892, Dashiell played football there, there being no restriction as to undergraduate playing at the time, and joined the teaching force of the Naval Academy as instructor in physics in 1892, joining the football coaching staff at the same time.

Taking charge of Navy football in 1904 as head coach after the Navy had lost to the Army for three years by increasingly large margins, in 1903 by 40 to 5, the score in the first year of his control dropped to the respectable figure of 11 to 0, and the next year, at Princeton, the service school teams tied at 6 points. In 1906 the Navy won, 6 to 0, and Dashiell voluntarily retired as head coach.

Capt. Dashiell never married. Two brothers, Julius M. Dashiell, of Baltimore, Md., and P. Thornton Dashiell, of Philadelphia, Pa., survive him.

Muncaster Cup Play to Start At Washington

The annual play for the Muncaster Cup trophy starts tomorrow for the ladies of the Washington Golf and Country Club, with another 18 hole round carded on Friday.

Twenty-six entries have been received for the 36 hole medal play event, with handicaps, by Mrs. G. F. Freer, chairman. Play will be in two flights, from 1-20 and 21 through 36.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—LOTTA FUN, $9.20, $4.70, $3.20; GOOD SOLDIER, $8.80, $4.60; JOLLY, $2.60.

LOTTA FUN took command at once, drew clear in the first quarter mile and dominating the running throughout, was never seriously threatened. GOOD SOLDIER, away well and prominent in the run down the backstretch, dropped back after rounding the turn, but came willingly when reaching the stretch. JOLLY, far back early, was forced to circle his field and closed going gamely.

DAILY DOUBLE, FIRST AND SECOND RACES, PAID $145.70.

THIRD RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good from gates. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post at 3:33. Off at 3:34½. Winner, Coward and Coffey's blk. f. (3), by Dark Hero—Rose Eternal. Trained by R. A. Coward. Value to winner, $600; second, $125; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:22 3-5, 0:46, 1:12 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—NIGRETTE, $21.90, $6.50, $4.40; PATROLITE, $4.00, $3.00; COMPANY, $3.70.

NIGRETTE had speed from the start, opened up a good lead and dominated the running throughout. PATROLITE hard hustled early, made a game effort in the last quarter mile to reach the winner, but was not good enough. COMPANY, well placed all the way, held on with good courage, but barely lasted long enough to save third from LEGION.

FOURTH RACE—Five and one-half furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 2-year-olds. Start good from gates. Won ridden out; place driving. Went to post at 4:02. Off at 4:03½. Winner, Mrs. V. Wyse's b. c. (2), by Time Maker—Cirprice. Trained by J. G. Brown. Value to winner, $600; second, $125; third, $50 fourth, $25. Time, 0:23 4-5, 0:48 2-5, 1:01, 1:07 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—STANDARD TIME, $6.10, $4.80, $3.30; GARDEN POOL, $7.80, $4.80; MAZIE, $3.30.

STANDARD TIME began moving up on the outside after rounding the far turn, came to the outside of the leader when reaching the stretch and was going away at the end. GARDEN POOL, away fast, went into a good lead, responded gamely when placed under punishment, but was unable to keep pace when challenged. MAZIE, prominent on the inside, had to be eased back at the turn from the backstretch, responded gamely when called upon and finished with good energy.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,100; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:31½. Off at 4:33. Winner, W. Elliott's ch. g. (5), by Reigh Count—Tetrarch's Captive. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $795; second, $170; third, $85; fourth, $50. Time, 0:24 1-5, 0:48, 1:13 2-5, 1:39 2-5, 1:45 3-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—COUNT TETRARCH, $15.50, $7.10, $4.40; LONE HAND, $5.50, $3.60; THE SINGER, $3.00.

COUNT TETRARCH was taken under steadying restraint after gaining a prominent position, wore down SHOT AND SHELL for the lead when nearing the stretch, and hard ridden at the end, had LONE HAND safe under pressure. LONE HAND, well placed early, responded willingly when called upon and finished stoutly. THE SINGER, closer up than usual during the early stages, held on gamely in the closing drive.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:02. Off at 5:02½. Winner, W. Elliott's ch. m. (7), by Chatterton—Merry Princess. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $750; second, $150; third, $75; fourth, $25. Time, 0:24 3-5, 0:48 4-5, 1:14, 1:40 2-5, 1:46 1-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—XANDRA, $6.70, $3.30, $2.50; GARDEN MESSAGE, $3.20, $2.50; GALLANT PAT, $3.20.

XANDRA was far back until rounding the far turn, worked his way up gradually and closing stoutly through the stretch, was up inside the last 70 yards to wear down the leaders. GARDEN MESSAGE was prominent all the way, went to the front in the stretch, impeded GALLANT PAT sharply nearing the end, forcing the latter to take up sharply. GALLANT PAT was forwardly placed all the way and was going steadily when suffering interference.

SEVENTH RACE—One mile. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 5:32. Off at 5:33. Winner, R. L. Hall, jr.'s b. f. (3), by On Watch—Bannerette. Trained by J. Y. Christmas. Value to winner, $600; second, $125; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:24, 0:48 2-5, 1:14, 1:40 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—LITTLE BANNER, $8.80, $5.30, $3.80; SUNMAD, $24.80, $12.90; PRINCE GAY, $5.50.

LITTLE BANNER, a trailer for the first half mile, moved up gradually on the outside thereafter and moving to the front with a rush when reaching the stretch, was never threatened. SUNMAD, unable to keep pace early, moved up on the inside when reaching the stretch and closed willingly. PRINCE GAY, far back early, closed with a belated burst of speed.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from gates. Won handily; place driving. Went to post at 6:02. Off at 6:04. Winner, Miss A. Two-dollar mutuels paid—U DEMON, $3.70, $3.70, $3.50; TOP SHELL, $6.10, $3.30; HAPPY FLAG, $4.80.

U DEMON outran his field to the first turn, opened up a good lead and rated along in front, was never threatened. TOP SHELL, away fast, was taken under restraint while holding to a forward position and responding gamely, finished with good energy. HAPPY FLAG, as usual, slow to begin, closed a good gap.

SEVENTH RACE—

This Morning

WITH SHIRLEY POVICH

Any little thing that those five New York Yankees in the American League line-up can contribute to the discomfort of the National League All-Stars at Griffith Stadium this afternoon will be contributed with the utmost personal satisfaction. Because the Yankees are downright sore at the National Leaguers. There has been talk. In their huddles during the past week the Yankee ball club has been putting in the rap for the National Leaguers. They resent the presence of certain National League stars in this all-star game—the presence of those National League players who are getting the glory but didn't see fit to come through with the 10 bucks it costs to be a member of the Professional Baseball Players Association, for whose welfare fund the game is being staged.

POVICH.

As one Yankee put it, "Those guys have a heluva nerve even playing in this game. The American League joins up almost 100 per cent in this charity business and those tight-fisted National Leaguers won't cough up a sawbuck apiece to join the association. Fine guys, they are."

• • • •

He was speaking of 10 players on the National League All-star squad of 23 who are notable exceptions among the big league players who help support the needy old-timers by $10 contributions to the association.

• • • •

He was talking about some guys who draw some of the biggest salaries in baseball, yet ignored the anual plea for a modest contribution—Bill Terry, Mel Ott, Carl Hubbell, Joe Moore, Dizzy Dean, Ducky Medwick, Cy Blanton, Arky Vaughan, Terry Moore and Rip Collins.

• • • •

In striking contrast is the American League's enrollment in the benefit association. Only one member of the league's All-Star squad—Tommy Bridges—is not listed as a member. The Yankees and the Nats are among the four American League clubs who are enrolled 100 per cent.

• • • •

Terry, in fact, is the only National League manager who is not enrolled on the association's rolls. And to this influence, perhaps, may be laid the fact that three other Giants in the game did not contribute. Terry, you know, is a funny guy. He rules his club with an iron hand and if Mr. Terry does not see fit to pay up, them smart guys on the team follow his lead.

• • • •

Anyway, the Yankees don't like the setup. They sort of figure that if a ball player was a right guy, he'd unlimber to the extent of ten bucks to help his own kind. And they figure, too, that the ball player who doesn't donate has a heluva lot of gall to even show up for the All-Star game.

• • • •

As a matter of fact, this may very possibly be the last All-Star game. Baseball officials and players themselves are getting slightly fed up with the entire business. The novelty of the thing has worn off and it may never again equal the peak it will hit in Washington today when the President graces the game with his presence.

• • • •

Baseball chiefs have come in for a great storm of criticism ever since the game was taken away from the fans and the team picked by managerial ballots, and criticism never did set well with the big league pooh-bahs. And neither does that three-day interruption of the playing schedule at a time when gate receipts are at their peak.

There have been squawks, too, from the managers. Joe Cronin, of the Red Sox, was loud in his criticism of the ruling that prevented all-star pitchers from being used for a period three days in advance of the all-star game. That rule forced him to keep Lefty Grove out of an important doubleheader with the Yankees and the fact that the Sox took two beatings on that day did not please Cronin.

• • • •

Besides, not a red penny accrues to either league from the all-star game. They haven't said so, but certain league officials are of a mind to donate the equivalent of the all-star game receipts to the association welfare fund and call it quits.

• • • •

In Short——

Manager Bill Terry, of the Nationals, snubbed the pre-game conference of managers, league presidents, umpires and Judge Landis yesterday, taking the day off to scout a young ball player at Norfolk . . . he delegated Manager Charley Dressen of the Cincinnati Reds as his representative . . . the last measure of bitterness would have been served Washington fans had Manager Joe McCarthy appointed Buck Newsom to round out the American League pitching staff which was reduced by the injury of Monty Stratton . . . McCarthy did give Newsom some consideration, then chose Johnny Murphy, of the Yankees . . . already in the till is $26,977 in gate receipts with 1,000 general admission standing-room tickets at $1.10 to go on sale today . . . The Washington Club, which receives no rent for the park, will be paid for its trouble in staging the game by being permitted to keep all profits from the concessions.

Discuss Final Details for All-Star Game

Dean Opposes Gomez In All-Star Classic

American League staff, but later developments pointed to McCarthy's designation of Johnny Murphy, relief ace of his Yankees.

Bill Terry threw down the gauntlet very emphatically in New York yesterday, when he declared "The National League is out to win. I won't make a change in our starting line-up unless I think it will help. If we can win with the same men who take the field at the start, we are going to win with them. The only changes I may make will be in the pitching."

McCarthy, too, was given the office to win the game by American League officials who highly prize victory as a boon to league prestige, but it is believed he will vary the American League line-up considerably in the late innings in order to give virtually every player on his squad of 23 a chance to perform. That was his method when he directed the team last summer in the All-Star game.

The announcement of the starting line-up contained virtually no surprises. In naming Gomez and Dean to start the game, McCarthy and Terry moved along logical lines. McCarthy, with a batting line-up heavily studded with .300 hitters, sacrificed a bit of batting strength by nominating Red Rolfe, of the Yankees, over Harland Clift, of the Browns, for the third base job, but helped the team defensively.

The Yankees' slugging duo of Joe DiMaggio and Lou Gehrig, batting third and fourth in the American League line-up, will be occupying the same posts to which they have been accustomed with the Yankees. Hitting in the clean-up role for the Nationals will be the Cardinals' Ducky Medwick who boasts the highest batting average in either league.

Manager McCarthy was mildly disturbed last night by a report Boston's Lefty Grove was suffering from a stiff neck and may not be at his best today. He had counted upon Grove for pitching duty in the late innings.

The pitching program of McCarthy and Terry appeared rather well defined last night. With Dizzy Dean and Gomez in the starting role, Terry will follow with the screw-balling Carl Hubbell, who is expected to have as his opposition Detroit's Tommy Bridges.

Terry appeared committed to young Grissom as his third pitcher of the day, but Manager McCarthy's third pitching choice was indefinite last night. The American League leader will have at his command Mel Harder, of the Indians; Grove and Murphy for the last three innings of duty. In the event the game goes into extra innings, the three-inning limit on pitchers will be lifted.

Despite the acknowledged superiority of the American Leaguers at bat, the National League will throw into the game a line-up of hitters whose averages actually are higher. With Medwick's .404 average the top figure on either club, the Nationals have a .384 hitter in Gabby Hartnett and a .385 hitter in Paul Waner. Shortstop Dick Bartell, of the Giants, the lowest-average man on the club, boasts a .230 figure.

Third Baseman Red Rolfe, of the Yankees, will be the only man on the field who cannot show a .300 average. He is hitting .290. And Bill Dickey and Joe Cronin at the current writing are hitting only .303. But with six potential home-run hitters in their line-up—DiMaggio, Gehrig, Averill, Cronin, Dickey and Bell—batting in a row, the dynamite will be on the side of the American Leaguers.

For the first 4½ innings, an American League umpire will be behind the plate, and the American League tall will be used. From that point, the umpire-in-chief will be a National League arbiter with the National League ball in use.

Brescia's left eye was cut by a left in the fight and it bled throughout the bout. The Alexandria boy's left eye started to close about midway of the battle and by the finish he was barely able to peep out at his opponent.

Russell (Buddy) Scott, once a promising light-heavyweight, scored a fourth-round knockout over Larry Shuck, of New York, in a special preliminary scheduled for six rounds. Larry started strong, punching Buddy hither and yon for two rounds. In the third, the New York 175-pounder began to weaken and toward the finish of the round he was sent to the canvas by a right hand to the stomach.

Referee Muggsy Morris had counted "nine" over Shuck's prostrate form when the bell sounded, ending the round. Being a rugged individualist, Morris paid no attention to the bell, but continued his count, pronouncing Shuck "out." He was finally persuaded that Larry had not been stopped and Shuck answered the bell for the fourth round.

The finish came after 2 minutes and 35 seconds of the last scheduled session of sock, when Vittorio softened Sammy up with a left to the head, then followed that punch with a right to the head that sent the New York middleweight grovelling in the resin dust.

Eddis Coderri, a New York heavyweight won a unanimous decision from Murray Kanner, of Washington, in a six-round preliminary. Coderri staggered Kanner with right hands to the head just often enough to win the award, as Murray made rather feeble attempts to land a knockout wallop.

Roy Bailey, Miami middleweight, won a unanimous but nevertheless highly disputed decision from Mickey Flannagan, of Pittsburgh, in another six-round preliminary. Mickey carried the fight to Bailey from his opening bell, winning the decision in the opinion of everybody present but the writer and the official deciders.

George Abrams, a local middleweight prospect, won a unanimous verdict over Joe Chaney, of Baltimore, in the four-round opener.

for a bit, counseling the boys to wait until their arms are fully developed before cutting loose with the ball. He cited the cases of his brother, Paul, and Bob Fellers, as examples of the harm that can be done.

"Feller," he added, "might have been, and still might be, the greatest pitcher in history if he hadn't been overworked in spring training."

The great man finished with the usual flourish of adverbs, announcing that the National League's pitcher staff of Parmelee, beg pardon, Hubbell, Mungo, Drissen and himself would "lefthand and righthand the American Leaguers to death." He urged everybody who could attend to do so. (Same old Diz.)

By broadcasting, incidentally, Dean broke one of Judge Landis' iron-clad rules prohibiting players from going on the air the night before and the night of the big game.

But, ho-hum, tomorrow's another day, and a fellow's got to have some excuse for getting his name in the headlines.

Cup Squads Show Well In Practice

Army and Navy Leech Trophy Teams Beat Local Stars.

Auspicious practice sessions yesterday gave evidence that the Leech Cup competition scheduled for Saturday on the Army-Navy Country Club courts will be a first-rate tournament between the Army and the Navy's best tennis players.

The Navy squad pulled about as sensational a shutout victory over a group of Washington players as has ever been listed in local tennis history by defeating a select group of Edgemoor Club netmen in every match to swamp them, on the Army-Navy courts, 10-0.

Barney Welsh, winner of the District tennis single championship for the past four years, and sixteenth ranking player in the country, fell in the feature match of the day, bowing to Lieut. J. K. McHugh, No. 1 ranking player of the Navy cup squad for the past two years, 7-5, 6-4.

While the Navy was polishing off the list of senior local stars, the Army team was brushing up its game against the Junior Davis Cup squad, trouncing the internationalists, 9-2.

In the absence of Harry Heffner, No. 1 player, Allie Ritzenberg played Lieut. Dolf Muelheisen, No. 1 Army player, and was crushed, 6-2, 6-0.

Dooley Mitchell, Grand National sectional champion, also was a victim of an unexpected defeat at the hands of Lieut. J. M. Farris, of the Navy squad, 0-6, 6-4, 7-5. And in the doubles matches the Edgemoor players fared no better. Mitchell and Welsh, city champions, fell before Lieuts. Farris and Howard, 6-3, 6-1, in still another upset.

Inter-American Horse Show Is Booked Friday

Event Scheduled Tomorrow Night at 7:30 in Jamboree Arena.

On tomorrow night, the last night of the Boy Scout Jamboree, the executive committee of the Inter-American Horse Show Association will present a night horse show, the first of its kind ever staged in Washington, in the Jamboree Arena on the Monument Grounds at 7:30 p. m.

Seven classes for hunters, jumpers and riding school hacks and as a special attraction, the outstanding exhibition units from the Third U. S. Calvary of Fort Myer will be shown. A platoon of Cavalrymen from Troop E will execute the intricate musical drill at a gallop to band accompaniment. The equally noted Troop F will present a rodeo reminiscent of the frontier days. This troop recently won laurels at Atlantic City for both the Cavalrymen and their mounts.

Proceeds from the show will be devoted to financing the participation of the famous military horse show team of the Irish Free State in the Inter-American Horse Show here next October.

Col. Jonathan M. Wainwright, commanding officer at Fort Myer; Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, president of the Inter-American Horse Show Association, and a third yet to be announced, will judge the classes. Trophies and ribbons will be awarded in each event, ribbons to the champion jumper, champion hunter and reserved champion hunter and jumper.

Scribes Pick National League

By Bob Garrison.

Some 160 baseball writers, representing nearly 100 newspapers and press associations, are congregating on the National Capital for the fifth playing of the All-Star baseball game between the best players of the American and National leagues.

Most of them are scheduled to arrive this morning shortly before the playing of the game. Some of them, however, were in town last night and between beers and through the cloud of cigar smoke which floated where ever two or more got together to discuss the situation, they stopped talking baseball long enough to—predict the winner of today's game.

In doing so, each complimented the work of the Washington Chapter of Baseball Writers of America who dispersed the working press tickets. The entire troupe, world series volume, agreed that the victory would hinge on whether the American Leaguers can connect with the battery fire of the National's pitchers.

The first to arrive was Harry G. Salsinger, veteran writer of the Detroit Evening News, who thought that "It will be easy for the senior league if Dean works. The other National League hurlers are strong, also."

He had sounded the cry for most of the others to harmonize on and in rapid succession writers from coast to coast were pondering the question, and then after doing so, seemed to name the winner with all the certainty of the 4-5 take-your-choice odds that are prevailing.

Eddie Murphy, New York Sun, backed the junior circuit, however, believeing that "the power at the plate can not be stopped by any pitchers for nine innings."

Charles Seegar, New York Daily Mirror, president, Baseball Writers of America and official scorer, said that he looked for an American League victory, and was backed up by Paul Menton, Baltimore Evening Sun sports editor.

That's the way it went. One liked this side, another the other side. One thing noticed was the faith that a writer held for the league which he was accustomed to watch, the league in whose circuit he traveled.

Other opinions were:

Gerry Moore, Boston Globe: "National League. The pitching will decide. You can't beat Dean with the cards down."

George Whitman, Boston Herald: "It's 50-50. I don't like to be noncommittal, but that's the way it looks to me."

Eddie Burns, Chicago Tribune: "National League, easy. The Big Three is three too many for the American League sluggers."

Arthur Patterson, New York Herald Tribune: "On added power, I give it to the National. They can bat, too."

Jimmy Dawson, New York Times: "The American League plays the faster ball. They'll win, Dean, Hubbell et al., be darned."

Bob Cutler, Newport News Daily Press: "You have to concede it to the National League's pitching. I like the National League, easy."

Rud Rennie, New York Herald Tribune: "The American League will win. They should catch one of the National League's big three on a bad day. That will be enough to win."

Allen Gould, Associated Press sports editor: "I give the National League a slight edge. It will be a close game, I believe."

John Drebinger, New York Times: "I like the National League—on everything. It is a better balanced team, all around. I like the way Terry has arranged them."

John Ebbinger, New York Daily News: "The National League this year. The balance, something the American League club lacks, is there. Watch Dean and Hubbell go. They're money players."

Miss Robinson Leads in City Net Tourney

Moves Into Third Round With Other Seeded Players at Columbia.

Margaret Robinson, seeded No. 1, led three other seeded players through the first two rounds of the District of Columbia tennis singles tournament yesterday by eliminating Mrs. John A. Reed in straight sets to move into the third round of play, scheduled today at the Columbia Country Club, 6—0, 6—0.

Francis Grimes, seeded No. 3, winner of the Grand National Tournament last month, stepped into the third round by pounding out a 6—1, 6—1 victory over Johanna Zillmeier, while Edith Clarke, No. 2, advanced into the same round by virtue of first and second round byes.

Sara Moore, seeded No. 4, moved through the first two rounds, advancing through the first round by taking a lengthy match with Clarissa Mitchell, 6—3, 8—6, before trouncing Sally Miller in the second round, 6—1, 6—2.

Willie O'Steen, former playground champion, also climbed into the third round by moving through the first two pairings, eliminating Mollie Thompson, 6—1, 6—0, in the first round, and then beating Lillian Rixey, in the second round, 6—1, 6—1.

Anne Ellis, unseeded, a semi-finalist in the Grand National sectional championship last month, also moved into the third round by besting Charlotte Wicker in the second round, 6—2, 6—3.

Junior Play Rained Out.

Wilmington, Del., July 6 (U.P.).—Opening play in the annual Delaware State junior and boys' tennis championships was postponed today because a heavy rainstorm made the clay courts of the duPont Country Club unfit for tournament competition. First-round matches will begin at 10 a. m. tomorrow.

Deposits Here Drop Sharply In 2d Quarter

Decline of $32,452.714 Is Revealed by Call of Comptroller.

The call issued yesterday by the Comptroller of the Currency, J. F. T. O'Connor, for the June 30 condition of the national banks in the United States and all banks in Washington revealed a total of $308,770,126.70 deposits in the 22 banks here. This is a drop of $32,452,714.86 from the total deposits reported March 31.

Bankers assigned the falling off in deposits here to two chief reasons, withdrawals from the larger banks by "country banks" to meet the Reserve Board's requirements for larger reserves at the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, and to heavy temporary withdrawals in connection with the personal tax in the District.

While deposits here were off for the three months, they revealed a gain of $2,558,937.12 over the call a year ago, on June 30, 1936.

Steel Scrap Price Advanced 50 Cents

New York, July 6 (AP).—A rise of 50 cents a ton in the price of No. 1 heavy melting steel scrap at Pittsburgh, the second in less than a week, was reported today by Dow, Jones & Co., making the Pittsburgh price $19 to $19.50.

The advance was seen in steel circles as indicating higher steel operations following reopening of strike-bound plants and the July Fourth holiday. The upturn is the first since a decline set in last March from around $24 a ton, the highest in 14 years.

Eastern Airlines Sets New Passenger Record

Eastern Airlines carried 11,983 revenue passengers in June, a new high record and up 10 per cent over the previous high of 10,903 passengers carried in May, E. V. Rickenbacker, general manager, reported yesterday.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively,
A Special Correspondent.

Steels Head Stocks in Broad Advance as Turnover Crosses Million Mark.

New York, July 6.—Financial markets acted as though they had passed a turning point and ended the long decline. Buoyancy in most stock groups was the most pronounced in several weeks and the stock turnover rose to around 1,400,000 shares, the largest since May 13. Closing prices were near the best, with numerous gains of 2 to 6 points. The day in stocks marked the fifth consecutive advance and recovered all the ground lost since May 25. Government bonds hardened, but commodities were somewhat mixed. September wheat closed a cent lower at 126 cents a bushel.

The tide of greater optimism which had begun to make last week continued to flow on the resumption of trading after the long holiday rest. In the meantime foreign market had sensed the change in feeling on this side and stocks and commodities had been bought while our markets were closed. On the surface and for the near term, at least, the developments of the last few days pustify the placing of more money in securities.

Turning Point.

To begin wth, the strike news was much better. In spite of the political maneuverings of certain State Governors, the Federal Administration at last—and at long last— is beginning to fear that the winds of violence of the C. I. O. might reach gale force and bring about a demand by the country that the Government do a little governing. The stand which the Secretary of Labor was directed by the President to take on sit-down strikes and the "informal" predictions that the President himself feels he may have either to restrain Lewis or part company with him also may be merely a part of political troop shifting. So long as they are not followed by early unfavorable action against industry, the effect will be to lift confidence.

Across the water, the French authorities also made a display of confidence which it can only be hoped will prove to have been justified by action to be taken. Simultaneously with the granting of permission for commodity markets to reopen, the Bank of France cut its discount rate from 6 to 5 per cent and other interest charges were lowered. The French money market has not yet softened from the return home of flighty capital, but the discount rate was put up as a preparation for the abandonment of gold and the lowering of the charge, probably to be quickly followed by further cuts, is meant to give the world reassurance that the exchange situation is well under control.

France will be given the benefit of the doubt on that score if the measures of the new financial dictatorship are taken with a view to strengthening the country's credit through some reduction in state outlay and a less socialistic leaning toward capital. Meanwhile the public explanations of the position made both by French officials (along with some special decrees) and our Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, somewhat vague on the face, are further explained and defended in quarters that ordinarily have the best information and sometimes are more or less inspired in their views.

Taking No Risks.

It is not true, the well informed say, that the United States Treasury has had to buy any francs to support the exchange over the crisis. In any event, we are told, off the record, there is no possibility of the Treasury taking a loss on francs, because France has not absolutely suspended gold payments. Gold still is available for exchange for francs to members of the three party agreement, it is said, notwithstanding the fact that the French authorities told the public that no further gold payments would be made.

The United States Treasury, it is urged by those who are entitled to credit for the best information, has not risked any money and the mechanics of operations for dealing in francs make it impossible for it to risk any. That is all to the good, but it would do no harm for the Treasury to say so outright, even at the risk of having the French public suspect that our aims are not altogether altruistic. What actually has reached the public so far is information that the Treasury would continue to operate as before under the three party agreement, which involved free sale of gold by France, and that France would henceforth refuse to let go any gold.

On the Bull Side.

Another factor helping to restore confidence in the markets was the report of an upturn in steel demand on the waning strike. The operating rate for the industry this week, it is estimated by the American Iron and Steel Institute, will fall to 67.3 per cent of capacity and from 75 per cent last week, in which event the rate will be on a level with that of a year ago. The reduction for the week is caused by the holidays, and an upturn next week is anticipated.

Demand still is good for steel scrap prices have hardened twice within a week, the advance of 50 cents a ton today coming with the news of strength in a number of other commodity markets. Hog prices, for example, reached a new top since the autumn of 1928. With the steel industry, the great barometer of general trading, running strongly again, and with rising agricultural prices insuring prosperity for good farmers, no great business recession is likely in near prospect.

Francs.

While one swallow does not foreshadow a summer, the movement of French funds home, according to banks and foreign exchange houses, was substantial, and since most of the remittances apparently went first to London and from London to Paris, the effect was to boost the sterling rate and also francs at the expense of dollars. Sterling rose more than a cent on the pound to a new high record for this year, while francs climbed more than a point above the rate ruling Saturday. The volume of business was small.

Steel Output Drops To 67.3% Capacity

New York, July 6 (AP).—Operations in the steel industry for the current week declined 7.7 points to 67.3 per cent of capacity, compared with 75.0 per cent last week, the American Iron & Steel Institute estimated today. A month ago operations averaged 76.2 per cent of capacity while a year ago the rate was 67.2 per cent. The sharp decline from the preceding week was due, steel circles explained, to the industry's usual observance of the July 4 holiday, involving a considerable contraction in operating activities.

FDIC Charges 30 Banks With Unsafe Acts

Prevalence of Speculative Practices Is 'Viewed With Concern.'

By the Associated Press.

In its annual report, issued yesterday, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation said that 24 banks had been cited "for unsafe and unsound practices" during 1936. Of these three banks corrected their practices, four closed and one was absorbed by another bank. The remaining cases were pending at the end of the year.

Chairman Leo T. Crowley said that citations, including those issued in 1936, were pending against about 30 banks, and that a close check was being made on about 200 others.

"The corporation," the report said, "has been viewing with concern the prevalence of speculative practices by banks in handling their investments.

"Over the past two or three years many banks to an increasing extent have been buying securities with a view to obtaining profits from a rise in the prices of those securities, rather than with a view to obtaining reasonable earnings over a period of time."

The report said that from the beginning of deposit insurance to the end of 1936, 75 insured institutions were placed in receivership. Of the 89,000 depositors in these banks 99.5 per cent were fully protected, the report said. This protection included deposit insurance up to $5,000 per depositor and preferential treatment of Government deposits.

Reserve Banks Cut U. S. Holdings

The Federal Reserve Board reported yesterday that banks had whittled their holdings of Federal securities by $81,000,000 during the week which ended June 30. In its condition statement for Reserve System members in 101 cities, the board said Federal security holdings aggregated $9,453,000,000 on June 30, or $1,346,000,000 under the corresponding date a year ago.

Holdings of securities other than Government issues also declined during the week ended June 30, dropping $37,000,000 to $3,077,000,000. This was $283,000,00 under the same week last year.

There was no change for the week in loans to commerce, industry and agriculture, collateralized by securities. These remained at $566,000,000.

Bank of France Lowers Rate as Franc Steadies

By the Associated Press.

Paris, July 6.—Premier Camille Chautemps' government drafted decrees tonight to replenish France's depleted treasury with 10,000,000,000 francs (about $386,500,000). The step was taken after the treasury relaxed the Bank of France's discount rate, dropping it from 6 to 5 per cent.

Lowering of the rate, made possible because the "floating franc," cut loose from its restrictions by Camille Chautemps' new government last week, steadied with foreign exchange.

Interest on loans on securities was lowered from 7 to 6 per cent, and interest on 30-day loans was down from 6 to 5 per cent.

The bank's regents took the action reducing the rates after the franc had showed steady at the market opening at 25.95 to the dollar, strengthening later to 25.75.

It was the first easing of credit since the franc was devalued on June 30. The lower rate indicated the bank's experts were convinced that the franc had reached a level where it could stand on its own feet, without artificial bolstering.

A decree of the ministry of finance, published under the full powers law recently granted the Chautemps government to save French finances, ordered the reopening of commodity markets today. The decree suspended the closing orders issued June 21 at the height of the fiscal crisis.

Cotton Is Steady; October at 12.06

New York July 6 (AP).—Cotton was steady today on foreign and domestic buying promoted by unfavorable Eastern belt weather and smaller private acreage figures than anticipated. October rallied from 11.97 to 12.13, and closed at 12.06. The list closed 1 point lower to 7 higher.

Profit Taking Topples Wheat From New Peak

Early Gains of 2¾ Cents Are Wiped Out by Late Selling.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 6.—Alarming crop reports from Ohio, Indiana and Illinois helped hoist wheat values to season fresh peak records today, but then heavy profit taking canceled gains.

Upturns of wheat prices, 2¾ cents maximum net here, were in the face of big receipts of newly harvested domestic grain Southwest totaling figures unequaled heretofore since 1931. The rise of the Chicago wheat market was also despite surprise breaks in quotation at Liverpool, where at one stage a tumble of 3⅝ rents a bushel took place, instead of 3¼ cents gain that was looked for.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were unchanged to 1¾ cents lower compared with Saturday's finish; July, $1.24 to $1.24¾; September, $1.25⅞ to $1.26; December, $1.28 to $1.28¼. Corn unchanged to 2¾ higher; July, $1.25½ to $1.25¾; September, $1.13⅝ to $1.13¾; December, 83½ to 83⅝. Oats unchanged to ¼ off; September, 39⅝ to 39¾, and rye ⅜ to 1 cent up; September, 91. Provisions closed 15 to 25 cents dearer.

Auction Sales

THURSDAY, AUGUST 5, 1937—
THOS. J. OWEN & SON, Auctioneers.
1431 Eye Street, N.W.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA HOLDING AN EQUITY COURT—LILLY SCOTT et al., PLAINTIFFS, vs. FRANK TOMLINSON et al., DEFENDANTS. EQUITY NO. 57608.—NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that in pursuance of a decree of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, entered July 2, 1937, in the above-entitled cause, the undersigned, appointed by said decree as trustee to make the sale therein provided, will offer for sale at public auction, at the premises, to the highest bidder or bidders, on the 5th day of August, 1937, at 4 o'clock, P. M., the following-described land and premises, situate in the District of Columbia and being: Lot numbered Thirty-three (33) in Lillie M. Knight's Combination of parts of lots in Square numbered Two hundred and eleven (211) as per plat recorded in Liber 25 at folio 38 of the Records of the Office of the Surveyor of the District of Columbia; Also parts of Original Lot numbered Three (3) in said Square numbered Two hundred and eleven (211), described in one parcel as follows: Beginning for the same on the North line of "N" Street, three (3) feet West of the Southeast corner of said lot; and running thence West on said street forty (40) feet; thence North one hundred and sixty (160) feet to an alley; thence East on said alley forty (40) feet, thence South one hundred and sixty (160) feet to the place of beginning; said parts of Original Lot numbered Three (3) being now known for purposes of assessment and taxation as Lots numbered Eight hundred and-six (806) and Eight hundred and seven (807).

TERMS OF SALE: All cash, taxes to be adjusted to date of sale, all conveyancing, notary fees and recording at purchaser's cost. A deposit of $5,000.00 cash will be required at time of sale, balance payable within thirty days after date of confirmation of sale or such further time as the Court may direct.

The right is reserved to retake and resell the property directed to be sold upon such notice as the Court may direct at the risk and cost of the purchaser in the event that any purchaser shall fail to complete his bid.

At ten o'clock in the forenoon, on the 9th day of August, 1937, or if said sale shall be adjourned, then on the fourth day following the conclusion of the bidding at such adjourned sale, or if said fourth day be Saturday, Sunday or a legal holiday, then on the next day not Saturday, Sunday or a legal holiday, the trustee will report the result of said sale to the Court for such orders, judgments and decrees concerning said sale and the matters remaining to be adjudicated herein as may, by the Court, be then deemed proper and desirable; and as provided by said decree, notice is hereby given that the above-entitled cause will be set for further hearing before the Court at the time and place of the making of the above directed report to the Court, and such hearing will be had without further notice to any parties.

Labor's Rights Held Religious And Economic

Declaring that "the inalienable rights of a living wage, decent working hours and proper housing are as much religious as economic rights," Rabbi Edward L. Israel, of Baltimore, spoke last night before a joint meeting of labor and religious leaders.

Other speakers at the meeting, which marked the conclusion of the first day of the Religion and Labor Foundation's traveling seminar for 1937, included N. P. Alias, president of the International Association of Machinists; Dr. John A. Lapp, labor conciliator, and the Rev. H. E. Cromer, president of the Washington Federation of Churches, who presided at the meeting.

This afternoon, Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, will address the group on "The Work of the Labor Department in Resolving Industrial Conflicts."

Following the Washington seminar, the members of the federation will go to Knoxville and Norris, Tenn., where a five-day inspection of the Tennessee Valley Authority will be made. After stopping at Muscle Shoals and Wilson Dam, the group will go to the Delta Cooperative Farm at Hillhouse, Miss.

After other stops in the South, the members will end their tour at Detroit, where Gov. Frank Murphy of Michigan and Homer Martin, president of the United Automobile Workers of America, will meet the seminar.

The Religion and Labor Foundation, described by members as an interfaith quest in the interest of social and economic justice, lists among its purposes the desire to help trade and industrial organizers by introducing them to progressive clergymen in all communities.

Ickes, Recovering From Illness, Lives In Office Suite

By the Associated Press.

Secretary Ickes, prevented by recent illness from making daily trips between the city and his farm home, set up temporary living quarters yesterday in his office suite in the Interior Department.

The Secretary of the Interior was at his desk yesterday for the first time since he went in Naval Hospital about a month ago for treatment of a stomach ailment.

Funeral Tomorrow For Col. T. J. Flynn

Requiem mass will be said at 10 a. m. tomorrow in the Walter Reed Chapel for Col. Thomas J. Flynn, who died Sunday at Jefferson Barracks, Mo. Following the services the cortege will form at the Fort Myer gate for burial with military honors in Arlington Cemetery.

Col. Flynn, 56, was educated at Albany Medical College and entered the Army from the organized reserves in 1910. He was promoted to the rank of lieutenant colonel during the World War. Col. Flynn graduated from the Army War College in 1928 and the Army Industrial College in 1929. One son, First Lieut. Thomas de N. Flynn, of the Coast Artillery Corps, survives.

The following officers of the Army Medical Corps will be honorary pallbearers: Col. Sanford W. French, Col. Frederick H. Foucar, Col. William Denton, Col. John J. Reddy, Col. Edgar C. Jones, Lieut. Col. Robert E. Skelton, Lieut. Col. Robert DuR. Harden, and Maj. Ralph E. Morrel.

Maryland Resort Has 80,000 Visitors

Ocean City, Md., July 6 (AP).—Ocean City got back to its normal summer routine today after entertaining a holiday week-end crowd so large 2,000 automobile loads of would-be visitors were not able to enter the city.

State police, on long duty directing the record-breaking flow of traffic, estimated 2,000 automobiles could not enter. The resort is on a strip of sand between Sinepuxent Bay and the Atlantic Ocean, which limits parking space.

Capt. W. I. Purnell, president of the Chamber of Commerce, estimated 80,000 persons were here Sunday night when the crowd reached its peak. He said it was the largest holiday crowd since he came here in 1878.

N. Y. State Corporation Called to 'Show Cause'

By the Associated Press.

The Securities Commission called on the Marlin-Rockwell Corporation, with offices at Jamestown, N. Y., Plainville, Conn., and Chicago, to show cause at a hearing July 14 why the registration of its common stock on the New York Stock Exchange should not be suspended or withdrawn.

The commission asserted the company had not supplied all required information in its annual report filed under the securities exchange act of 1934.

Atlantic City Charge For Entrance Urged

Atlantic City, N. J., July 6 (U.P.).—Mayor Charles D. White said today that "the time has come to charge visitors to insure their making some contribution to running this great park of ours." Pointing out that thousands had spent the Fourth of July week-end here, White suggested charging a fee for entry into the city, giving municipal scrip good at local stores to visitors in return, "thus insuring some contribution from many who now use Atlantic City simply as a free park."

Scenes at Takoma Park's Belated Independence Day Parade

Post Staff Photos.

Charlotte Dye, 7, dressed herself up as Miss Columbia and won first prize for best costume at Takoma Park's delayed Independence Day celebration last night.

The prize for the best float (above) went to the Women's Auxiliary of the Takoma Park Fire Department. Members of the auxiliary costumed themselves as Colonial dames.

County Warns Theater Against Sunday Shows

Fort Myer Heights House May Face Old Blue Law Charge.

Commonwealth's Attorney Lawrence W. Douglas informed the management of the Wilson Theater at Fort Myer Heights that if they continued to operate on Sundays he would press charges against them. He pointed out Sunday shows are in violation of Virginia's ancient Blue Laws.

The theater opened last Sunday and in the evening was ordered closed by Sheriff Howard B. Fields.

Theaters are open Sundays in many sections of the State where the courts have ruled the blue laws ar not violated.

Charles T. Jesse, county treasurer, announced last night he has turned over to Phillip O. Shepherd, State and county deliquent tax collector, all unpaid personal property taxes for 1935, amounting to $17,499.70. The treasurer said he has notified all taxpayers of the amount due.

Uncollected State taxes reported to Phillips amount to $361.79 on intangibles, and $1,783.91 on income. Of this amount $670 is contested.

All real estate taxes subsequent to 1926 still are payable to the county treasurer, as are capitation taxes and 1936 personal property taxes.

Hutchins Accepts St. John's Position

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 6.—Dr. Robert M. Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago, announced today he had accepted appointment to the board of governors of St. John's College in Maryland in order to assist in "a revival of the ancient purposes of education."

The 38-year-old educator, one of three men from the Chicago institution to join the administrative personnel of St. John's, said the Maryland school 'is an excellent place to try out the idea of educating people to live, instead of to earn a living."

Stringfellow Barr, who succeeds former United States Prohibition Director Amos W. W. Woodcock as president of St. John's, and Scott Buchanan, the new dean, served for the last year on a University of Chicago committee on liberal arts," which has drawn up a report, as yet unpublished, on how to revive the ancient liberal arts education.

Nice, Recovering, Works for an Hour

Annapolis, Md., July 6 (AP).—Gov. Harry W. Nice, recovering from an operation for removal of his right eye, was able today to spend an hour working over mail accumulated since he went to the hospital.

Nice said he was attending only to correspondence which did not require much effort. His physicians have ordered a complete rest for the time being.

He will sail Friday for a week-end cruise on the Chesapeake Bay. Physicians will accompany him.

Alaska Phone Service Will Be Opened Today

Government and commercial telephone service between the continental United States and the Territory of Alaska will be opened officially today at 2 p. m., the War Department has announced. Conversations between Government and American Telephone & Telegraph Co. officials at Washington and at Juneau will formally inaugurate the new radio-telephone channel, it has been indicated.

The new circuit, which will operate between Seattle, Wash., and Juneau, Alaska, has just been completed through the joint efforts of the Signal Corps, United States Army, and the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

Takoma Park Residents Cheer Delayed Independence Parade

Charlotte Dye, 7, Dressed as 'Miss Columbia,' Wins First Prize for Best Costume in the Procession.

Takoma Park's gala Independence Day parade, postponed from Monday, was held last night. Thousands lined the streets as the gayly decorated floats and marchers led by the Citizens Community Band of Sandy Spring traversed the streets of the community in Maryland and the District of Columbia.

Charlotte Dye, 7, costumed as Miss Columbia, received first prize for the best costume. The Woman's Auxiliary of the Takoma Park Volunteer Fire Department won the medal for the best float. Members of the auxiliary, dressed as colonial dames, clustered about a huge Liberty Bell.

Nick's Delicatessen won second place in the float contest, with the Indian Stone Garden displayed by R. M. Shenk as third. The Hillcrest Florist and the Takoma Bicycle Shop were winners of the prizes for the most unique floats.

The prizes were presented by William B. Mauger, commander of Takoma Park Post, American Legion. A feature of the parade was a float entered by the Young Men's Democratic Club of Takoma Park, which carried a huge barrel of lemonade for distribution to the marchers and onlookers.

E. Brook Fetty was marshal of the parade which was divided into five divisions headed respectively by George B. Kissinger, Mrs. Alice Lyddane, Mrs. Harry P. Dodge, J. Milton Derrick and Maj. C. Leonard Boyer.

Following the parade a fireworks display was held on the grounds of the Takoma D. C. recreation center, Fourth and Van Buren streets northwest. Maj. William V. Fischer, chairman, assisted by Joseph Kurz and Joseph Tenley, superintended the display.

John Douglas Dies, Navy Yard Worker

His widow, Mrs. Mary Douglas, a son, Edward Douglas and a daughter, Mrs. Evelyn Ivey, of Washington, survive.

Funeral services will be held Friday afternoon at the Douglas home. Burial will be in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

Funeral Rites Held For William H. Scott

Funeral services for William H. Scott, 41, of Laurel Md., who was drowned Saturday at Woodland Beach, were held yesterday at the First Presbyterian Church, Laurel. Burial was at Ivy Hill Cemetery.

Scott is survived by his mother, Mrs. Eliza J. Scott and a sister, Miss Estelle Scott.

Woman Confesses Killing Chum in 'Gossip Slaying'

Coushatta, La., July 6 (AP).—Jessie Pepper, cool and collected, in a trim pink silk dress, told a coroner's jury tonight that she killed May Elvin Allen, her lifetime chum, in Monday's "gossip slaying" near here only after being shot at, slapped and beaten with a stick.

The story of the 17-year-old girl was corroborated in some details, denied in others, by additional witnesses. Miss Pepper already is held by Sheriff Jones on charges of murder and a second warrant today charged her mother with "assault, intention of murder and assisting in murder." It was sworn out by Mrs. Allen, mother of the slain girl.

On the witness stand, preceding Miss Pepper, Mrs. Allen disclosed for the first time the cause of the quarrel. Referring to Mrs. Pepper and Jessie, Mrs. Allen testified:

"They had been telling lies on Elvin. She spent a month with her Uncle Bill in Vivian. She ((Jessie) told that Elvin had a baby while up there. She told Elvin's fellow, Percy Methivm."

New Posts Given 7 State Policemen

Baltimore, July 6 (AP).—Seven State policemen were assigned to new posts today in routine transfers ordered by Maj. Elmer F. Munshower, superintendent of the force.

The sergeants in charge of the substations at Frederick and Conowingo were exchanged, Sergt. D. B. Peterson went to Conowingo and Sergt. W. R. May went to Frederick. The officers changed were:

E. B. Dannenhower from Cumberland to Salisbury, C. R. Parker from Salisbury to Laurel, J. J. Thompson from Laurel to Frederick, B. H Cecil from Frederick to Laurel, M. Storms from Conowingo to Cumberland.

Suicidal Giant Saved.

Peiping, July 6 (U.P.).—The last of Peiping's Giants, Wei Chi-hsien, who is 7 feet 4 inches tall, jumped into a well today and was rescued with difficulty by police. He said he was depressed over the death of his comrade, Liu Yu-ching, who was 8 feet tall. Both giants were guards at the Peiping Zoological gardens and were known to thousands of American tourists.

President Is a Speculator In Growing Christmas Trees

Forestry Experts Are Skeptical President Will Make Financial Success of Hyde Park Venture.

When President Roosevelt started his Christmas tree plantation at Hyde Park, he entered an unorganized and highly speculative business, according to Department of Agriculture forestry experts, some of whom yesterday had their doubts about his making a financial success of the venture.

"The Christmas tree business is definitely a one-time-a-year affair and has probably more than its share of ups and downs. We advise all growers to have a contract on prices and time of delivery before they cut their trees. Otherwise they run a tremendous risk," said Perkins Orville, assistant division chief of the Forest Service Department.

The President told newspapermen who visited his plantation last Sunday he anticipated his trees would bring him an average of 50 cents each and that from each Christmas-tree acre he hoped to net at least $40.

New York Market.

"I think that is a reasonable estimate, because he's so near the New York market. Some people are making a good living out of the Christmas tree business. I'd say the German settlers near Reading, Pa., have done the most with it," said M. A. Mattoon, also of the Department of Agriculture. Others were inclined to believe the President would have a hard time averaging 50 cents a tree in a business where prices are unregulated.

Neither Matton nor Orville would advise the President to mix mistletoe growing with Christmas tree raising, although that appears to be the field in which real money could be realized. Christmas trees grow all over the United States, but mistletoe is limited to the Southern States and is quite expensive when it reaches the big Northern market. To the Department of Agriculture, however, it is devoid of romantic holiday traditions and has the classification of "parasite and pest."

Statistics on the Christmas tree industry are "just guess work," due to its free-for-all characteristics, and the fact the natural growth exceeds the cultivated. The Department of Agriculture once estimated this country "consumes annually from 6,000,000 to 10,000,000 trees," but made no effort to say how many were grown on the few special plantations.

As long ago as 1931 the department issued a bulletin on "Christmas Trees as a Cash Crop for the Farm" and urged farmers to consider filling fence corners and worn-out hillsides with evergreens suited to their area. The department would like to see the business better regulated and never misses a chance to boost the "superiority of a shapely home-grown tree" over one "shipped in from a distance."

Cutting Begins Soon.

As a matter of fact, the people who have been in the Christmas tree trade the longest will begin cutting their trees next month and during September will get most of them tied up ready for shipment. That explains the wilted look in many parlors on the morning after Santa Claus's visit, and is probably what would happen to the President's trees if he should attempt to market them on the West Coast. Due to the monopoly one concern has exercised in the New York market for a number of years, one expert pointed out yesterday, the temptation to find a far-away market might be a factor at Hyde Park.

The President is growing firs, which the Department of Agriculture declares to be "undoubtedly the Christmas tree par excellence." In many American localities, however, the red cedar is preferred. Around Washington, the Virginia pine is favorite because it is the easiest to obtain. The top of a long leaf pine is used in some states, and in others spruce and balsam are utilized.
